Proposal 'Accepted,' But Qualifications Make It Unworkable.

Rebels Demanding Belligerent Rights

Blast Idea as 'Wholly Valueless' to End Civil War.

Foreign Affairs.

Anti-Nazi Polish neighbors of Danzig Free City demanded Poland send troops to the strongly pro-German city to "maintain order."

Japanese troops captured Singtze, Lake Poyang port, in their drive on Nanchang; U. S.-Japanese relations uneasy over gunboat on Yangtze.

Franco Rejects Plan.

By Frank Kelly.
Special Cable to The Post.

London, Aug. 21.—The British and French governments were confronted tonight with the gravest situation that has yet arisen from the Spanish Civil War through the virtual rejection by Gen. Franco of the Nonintervention Committee's plan for withdrawing foreign volunteers from Spain.

Although agreeing "in principle" to send home the thousands of Italian and German fighters, Franco has turned the nonintervention scheme upside down, and dealt it what is considered a death-blow by demanding full and unconditional belligerent rights beforehand as the price of his co-operation.

The nonintervention committee had offered him a limited form of these rights, to be granted only after a start had been made evacuating volunteers.

Would Kill Scheme.

Franco's terms, for which he kept the committee of 26 nations waiting more than six weeks, were made public tonight in the form of a 1,500-word note from Burgos.

In addition to turning down the committee's fundamental offer, the insurgent leader put forward views which diplomatic quarters here believe would kill the entire scheme.

Proposed immediate withdrawal of an equal number of 10,000 volunteers from each side, rejecting the plan for evacuation in proportion to the numbers engaged.

Demanded the permanent closing of Spain's French and Portugese frontiers to arms and men.

Refused to allow permanent commissions to check imports at Spanish ports, because they would "usurp, in a humiliating manner, the sovereign rights of Spain."

Rejected the scheme for aerial observation of the Spanish frontiers and ports, because airports now are "entirely military in character" and such control would amount to a "permament foreign watch" on Spain's defenses.

Accepts Withdrawals.

Then only favorable points in Franco's reply, in Whitehall's opinion, were his acceptance in principle of the withdrawal scheme, his agreement to 10,000 as an appropriate number with which to begin an evacuation; his offer to respect two ports of safety in government Spain for foreign vessels carrying foodstuffs, and his assurance that his regime "does not consent and

Rebels Routed In Ebro Valley, Loyalists Say

8,000 Dead on Both Sides Since Friday; Outcome in Doubt.

By the United Press.

Hendaye, France, Aug. 21.—The Loyalist Government announced tonight its army had administered a "personal defeat to insurgent Gen. Franco, killing more than 1,000 of his crack troops and turning his Ebro Valley counter-offensive into a disastrous rout.

Six waves of Insurgent Moors and Foreign Legionnaires, under personal command of Franco and led by 100 Italian tanks, were said to have been thrown back on the rutted mountain slopes around Villalba de los Arcos, 6 miles north of Franco's Gandesa base.

Estimate 8,000 Dead.

(A dispatch from Alcaniz dated Monday, August 22, said insurgents claimed to have captured "important positions" in the mountain region. The insurgent communique said 90,000 men, with 40 batteries of artillery, were opposing them.)

Frontier reports indicated the fighting was taking the biggest toll of lives of any battle fought thus far in the civil war.

The fiercest fighting was around Gaeta Peak, a 1,700-foot high stony spur where Loyalists held the summit against repeated attack and the hammering of hundreds of guns and planes.

The battle along the Ebro has taken close to 8,000 Loyalist and Insurgent lives since dawn Friday, it was estimated, and its final outcome still was in doubt.

Supported by Tanks.

Gaeta Peak may decide the war along the Catalonian boundary, military experts said, because its slopes dominate the upper half of the Gandesa salient driven by the Loyalists.

The Modesto Communist division of the Loyalists, holding positions around the mountain's base, was said to have been riddled by Franco's Moors.

For 24 hours, government dispatches said, Insurgents threw one assault after another against the entrenchments of the government's international brigades. They were

Soldiers Unload Vessel in Strike

By John Elliott.
Special Cable to The Post.

Paris, Aug. 21.—Boldly challenging French labor, Premier Daladier, in a radio address to the nation tonight, declared the 40-hour week would have to be modified so industries working for national defense could operate 48 hours a week.

Analyzing the causes of the recent decline of the franc, which has brought it to within 10 centimes of the rate of 179 francs to the pound sterling, which, the government declared last May, was the lowest point to which it would be permitted to fall, the premier found it was the result of a lack of confidence.

He said this followed a drastic decline in French production, which has brought the national income down from a peak of 49,000,000,000 francs ($1,313,000,000) in 1931 to 22,000,000,000 francs ($594,000,000) last year, of which 10,000,000,000 francs ($270,000,000) was consumed by taxes.

'Can France Lag Behind.'

France's salvation was to be found only in increased work, Daladier told his countrymen, pointing out that in no nation in the world, except in France and Mexico, did the 40-hour week prevail.

He demanded:

"In the face of the authoritarian states, which are equipping themselves and arming themselves without any consideration of length of work, and in the face of the democratic states, which are endeavoring to recover their prosperity and assure their security and for this purpose have adopted a labor week of 48 hours, can France lag behind in controversies which compromise her future?"

Labor Chief Is Away.

He reiterated the denial the government would adopt any form of exchange control or essay a new devaluation of the franc, emphasizing the necessity of France's maintaining the tripartite monetary accord with Great Britain and the United States. Daladier said either of these devices "would result in the ruin of the international collaboration which unites the great democracies

Husband Leaves Babs in Italy and Is Off to Germany

Venice, Aug. 21 (AP).—See-sawing confidence of Venice society over the possibility of a reconciliation between the former Barbara Hutton and her estranged husband, Count Court Haugwitz-Reventlow, swung down today.

The count, who had seen his wife here several times apparently on the friendliest terms—although they are legally separated and have paved the way ultimately for divorce—left by automobile for Salzburg, Germany.

Their appearance together had caused speculation in Venice society that the Woolworth heiress and her titled husband might forgive and forget.

Vienna Hails Horthy on Way To Seal Hitler's Friendship

By the Associated Press.

Vienna, Aug. 21.—Hungary's Regent, Admiral Nicholas Horthy, received a royal welcome today from his Nazi neighbors for the first time as he arrived in this former capital of the Austro-Hungarian Empire en route to an important week's visit with Reichsfuehrer Hitler.

The Nazi press hailed his state visit as presaging new neighborly friendship, which, with the Rome-Berlin axis, is "the strongest bearer of peace in middle Europe and the Danube basin."

Pomp surrounding Horthy's visit was in accord with his royal status as regent of the vacant Hungarian throne and also was an indication of Hitler's desire to bring Hungary more completely into the Nazi sphere.

Arthur Seys-Inquart, governor of Austria, greeted the 70-year-old regent with these words:

"I have the honor to welcome Your Highness in the name of the Fuehrer and Reichschancellor on the soil of the German Reich.

"I am particularly pleased to be able to extend this welcome in Austria. Austria is bound with the Kingdom of Hungary by a common history. This history is a mutually

Pope Attacks Exaggerated Nationalism

By the Associated Press.

Castel Gandolfo, Italy, Aug. 21.—Pope Pius XI emerged from his summer palace today to warn a group of students and missionaries that "exaggerated nationalism is a veritable curse."

A Vatican news service quoted the Pontiff as telling the students "there is a place for a just, moderate nationalism associated with all the virtues," but cautioning them to be on guard against "exaggerated nationalism."

Warning on Nationalism.

Such exaggeration, the Pope declared, is the cause for "continuous division and almost for war."

The Pope, much to the surprise of Castel Gandolfo townsfolk, left his place for the first time since he reached here April 30 and motored to the summer school of the College of Propagation of the Faith.

Part of his discourse to students said:

"There are nations and there also is nationalism. But God has made the nation. There is a place then for a just, moderate nationalism associated with all the virtues.

"But guard yourselves against exaggerated nationalism which is a veritable curse. Alas, it seems that all events support us when we say a veritable curse because it is the reason for continuous division and almost for war.

Follows Agreement.

"For missions, then, it is a veritable curse of sterility because it is not by that road that fertility of faith increases nor does the apostolate flourish there."

The Pontiff's words came close after the Fascist Party announcement yesterday of an agreement to end friction between Catholic action societies and fascism.

In a speech July 29 the Pope to some extent had linked this "exaggerated nationalism" and the Fascist attack on Catholic action. The Fascists accused the Catholic societies of more than religious activities, but settled their difficulties in a new agreement with the Vatican.

100 Hindu Pilgrims Reported Dead as Rains Wreck Train

Madras, India, Aug. 21 (U.P.)—Nearly 100 persons, mostly religious pilgrims, were reported killed early today when a crowded passenger train rolled down an embankment near Trichinopoly, 30 miles west of Tanjore, after a cloudburst.

Survivors of the disaster, worst in the history of Southern India, said 20 of the dead were members of a wedding party. About 30 dead were officially identified tonight, 24 hours after the wreck.

The train rolled down the embankment after a midnight cloudburst had washed away a section of track.

Va. Boy, 6, Killed By 'Unloaded' Gun

Abingdon, Va., Aug. 21 (AP).—An "unloaded" gun today claimed the life of James Edward Hayter, 6-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Elbert Hayter, of Houston, Va.

Shot through the temple by a playmate, he died at an Abingdon hospital this morning, a few minutes after he was admitted.

J. Paul Campbell, Abingdon undertaker who brought the boy to the hospital, said the boy's father told him his son was shot by Ann Moore, 11-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Moore.

Bandit No. 1 Seized With Pal in Texas

Walters, Found Lurking on Parking Lot, Gives Self Up.

By the United Press.

Dallas, Tex., Aug. 21.—Floyd Hamilton, lanky Oklahoma bad man and last of the notorious Barrow-Parker-Hamilton gang of Southwestern desperadoes, was captured today, afoot and unarmed, in a river bottom outside this city.

Five hours earlier, Hamilton's companion in a Texas jailbreak last June, Ted Walters, was picked up by police in downtown Dallas, ending the Nation-wide manhunt for the two men named by Chief G-man J. Edgar Hoover as the country's No. 1 and No. 2 desperadoes.

Hamilton told policemen who arrested him he and Walters had lost their guns when they fought their way out of a trap near DeQueen, Ark., 10 days ago.

Escaped From G-Men.

The capture of both men was an anticlimax to a desperate getaway attempt earlier in the night when Hamilton, picked up by Federal Bureau of Investigation men, broke away and was shot in the left leg as he fled.

Hamilton was limping along the Trinity River bottom toward a railroad track, apparently intending to catch a freight train out of town, when Detectives Will Fritz and Jack Archer of the Dallas Police Department found him.

He surrendered without a fight, they said. He had several buckshot wounds in his left leg, which was badly inflamed.

Police said the two men had lived for several days in a hide-out here with a 30-year-old colored man, Willie Marshall, who was arrested on suspicion of harboring fugitives from justice. Marshall was believed to have met the two men on a freight train when they were beating their way toward Dallas from Texarkana.

Messages Give-Away.

Police first got word of the presence of the desperadoes in Dallas when they saw Marshall carrying messages to known friends of the two bandits. He is believed to have been arrested, and was reported to have given information

Burglar Gets $8.85 From Rep. Eicher, Flees in His Car

Representative Eicher (Democrat), of Iowa; Mrs. Eicher, their daughter, a guest and a brand-new "watchdog" slept peacefully early yesterday as a light-footed bandit tiptoed through the Eicher home, emptied three pocketbooks of $8.85, stole Eicher's keys and escaped in Eicher's car.

Police said the intruder apparently entered Eicher's house at 2807 Thirty-fifth street northwest by lifting a hook on the screen door. Sneaking past the three-month-old watchdog which had been purchased on Saturday, the thief entered Representative and Mrs. Eicher's room and took $3 from her purse. In a room where a guest, Mark B. Welt, of the Federal Power Commission, was asleep, he rifled Welt's pocketbook of $5 and next discovered a purse containing 85 cents belonging to Eicher's daughter, Betty, 21, who was sleeping on the porch.

After a short time Oldofredi was released. Police said he was traveling on a faked passport obtained in New York.

President a Terrorist, Says Tydings; Lewis Defends Party Purge

Tydings Branded Republican Voter

Representative Lewis, replying last night to Senator Tydings' speech anent the "purge" campaign, accused Tydings of treating President Roosevelt as a "carpetbagger."

Tydings had denounced the efforts of the President and his aides to use the power of the Federal Government to "destroy" him and the State's sovereignty, and had recalled the dark days of the reconstruction era when "men in Maryland . . . had to walk between lines of fixed bayonets to register their choice for national representatives."

Lewis, going on the air three hours after Tydings, said:

"Mr. Tydings forgets that nearly 400,000 Marylanders voted for the President in 1936—voting for him as a friend and President, not as an alien or an invader."

The Sovereign Voice.

"Mr. Tydings also spoke of the sovereign voice of the State of Maryland but forgets that the same sovereign spoke in 1932 and 1936, and was overwhelmingly in favor and accord with Mr. Roosevelt. And if there is anyone who has ignored that sovereign voice of Maryland it is Millard E. Tydings.

"Mr Tydings, when having been elected in a Domecratic landslide on Mr. Roosevelt's coat tails, has voted against 22 important Roosevelt measures designed to be of vital import to the State of Maryland. In this voting record he parallels that of Senator Vandenberg, Republican leader"

Lewis linked Tydings with the sale of 124 Government ships on November 5, 1932, to the Boston Iron & Metal Co., for their scrap iron. That was during the last days of the Hoover Administration. When the Roosevelt Administration came in, Lewis said, Secretary of Commerce Roper looked into the sale, and suspended delivery until the Navy could be consulted.

"This," Lewis said, "brought a storm of protest from Mr. Tydings. He became the crusading champion of the Boston Iron & Metal Co.—Why, I don't know. He introduced two resolutions in the Senate."

Lewis said that ultimately 45 of the vessels were found by the Navy

Waitress Hurt In Plunge Off Skyline Drive

Mary Hudgins, 37, of 705 King street, Alexandria, a waitress, was painfully hurt yesterday afternoon when she fell 40 feet down a cliff on Skyline Drive near Luray, Va.

She was given emergency treatment at Luray and rushed to Harrisonburg Hospital, where it was discovered she had suffered severe lacerations of the leg.

It was learned the girl had gone to Skyline Drive with two friends on a Sunday outing, expecting to return last night. She was taken from the mountain to Luray by her friends and turned over to Chief of Police Heyward Leake, of Luray.

Leake took her to Dr. Fred P. Amos, who gave first aid and ordered her to the hospital.

Camp Praises G.O.P. Plan to Back George

Statement Removes Doubt Foe Belongs 'With Republicans,' He Says.

By the Associated Press.

Atlanta, Aug. 21.—Active Republican support for Senator George to promote a Democratic split in 1940 stirred mixed reaction in Georgia today and heightened national significance of the State's forthcoming Democratic primary.

President Roosevelt made it an outstanding New Deal test ten days ago when he called for George's defeat and indorsed Lawrence Camp, United States district attorney and ardent New Dealer.

James W. Arnold, Republican National Committeeman, brought 1940 boldly to the fore in Athens last night when he disclosed he was urging Republicans to enter the Democratic fight and back George, because "it is absolutely necessary . . . that there be a split in the national convention of the Democratic Party in 1940," and the fate of this split rests on the shoulders of a few men."

Senator George refused comment on Arnold's move, and his headquarters indicated he probably would take no cognizance of it in the future.

Camp hailed it as clarifying the issues, and said "if there ever was any doubt that the President was right in stating at Barnesville that Senator George belonged in the same group with Republicans that doubt has now been removed."

Former Gov. Eugene Talmadge, also a senatorial candidate, confined himself to the following cryptic statement:

"That's just like George and the (Georgia) power company, trying to buy everyone they can. Of course they can't get the Republicans but they can get Jim Willie Arnold."

William G. McRae, Townsend planner and fourth man in the race, expressed belief Arnold's move would have little effect "because Republicans have been voting in Democratic primaries right along."

Aged Woman Killed by Cab, 61st Traffic Victim of Year

A 63-year-old woman became Washington's sixty-first traffic victim yesterday as commissioners prepared to put into effect the safety program recommended by the Traffic Safety Committee to halt the rise in child traffic deaths here. Yesterday's victim, Mrs. Flora Kremkau, of 1319 Kern street northwest, was the twenty-fourth person more than 50 years of age to have been killed in traffic accidents this year.

Police said Mrs. Kremkau ran headlong into the side of a cab as she attempted to catch a street car at Florida and Georgia avenues northwest. She suffered a fractured skull and died a few hours later in Freedmens Hospital.

Driver of the car, Marshall Fulton, 39, colored, 405 M street northwest, was released pending a coroner's investigation.

In another accident yesterday Walter S. Hall, 68, 746 Twelfth street southeast, was seriously injured when he was struck by a car at Eleventh and G streets southeast. Fred G. David, 21, 723 B street southeast, was arrested and charged with reckless driving and held pending the outcome of Hall's injuries.

One man was killed, and two others seriously injured when their automobile overturned near St. Leonard, Md. The man killed was Warren Brown, jr., of Huntingtown, Md. The injured, both from Huntingtown, were Isaiah Tyler and

Opponent Called A 'Rubber Stamp'

Roosevelt Held 'Most Powerful Man in the World.'

By Edward T. Folliard

Senator Tydings said last night that, as part of President Roosevelt's "purge" war against him thousands of small Maryland officeholders are being "intimidated and terrorized."

Tydings' speech was an answer to President Roosevelt's castigation of him as a "betrayer" of the New Deal.

He described Representative Lewis, whom the White House is aiding, as a "100 per cent rubber stamp candidate," who has made it clear that "his vote on any and all questions will be the personal property of the United States."

"Most Powerful Man."

"The Chief Executive, or his advisers, or both, have tried to determine in advance not only that the people of Maryland shall not elect me, but that they must elect David J. Lewis, and all with Mr. Lewis' full approval.

"They have brought about a situation where I am not running against the candidate who seeks on principle to represent the Democratic voters of Maryland, but where I am running against the power of the Federal Government directed against me by the Chief Executive and his advisers.

"It was decided that the full weight of the national administration should be put behind his (Lewis') candidacy.

Calls "Purge" Foreign.

"The word 'purge' began to cr into the Maryland newspapers word foreign to our ears in c dealings with each other—a w which we are accustomed to re only in connection with stories of wholesale assassination in foreign countries. Over here that word has been used, so far, only to convey the idea of an effort by those in power to drive out of public office those who may have ideas of their own or those who, for any reason, may not be willing to surrender their own convictions and consciences to the keeping of seekers after absolute authority.

"A Maryland 'purge' was discussed and, according to reports, is about to take place. The first overt act was a demand for the resignation of the Federal housing administrator of the State of Maryland. Next, the Chief Executive, in public utterances, praised Mr. Lewis and made attacks on my record as a United States Senator.

Maryland Invaded.

"He has invaded Maryland through the press. Now it is reported that he will invade Maryland in person to carry on this war against me. In the meantime, it is stated from Mr. Lewis' headquarters that other Federal officers who desire to support my candidacy will be dismissed and their places filled by persons chosen by my opponent, Mr. Lewis.

"Of course, the purge is directed to the elimination of these high Federal officers. The real purpose of these threats to leading Federal officials is to intimidate and terrorize thousands of citizens of Maryland who hold minor positions under these officers, many of whom earn slender salaries upon which they support themselves and families.

"In other words, Federal offices are being used, or are to be used, to intimidate and coerce officials to fight me on pain of instant dismissal,

New Deal Plot To 'Sovietize' Industry Seen

By the Associated Press.

Representative Shafer (Republican), Michigan, declaring Administration planners were arranging for Government-sponsored tractor and textile manufacturing plants, demanded yesterday that President Roosevelt tell the country how far he intends to carry Government competition with private industry.

In a statement issued through the Republican National Committee, Shafer said Mr. Roosevelt should state his intentions "specifically and unequivocally" before the November elections.

"Let there be no misunderstanding about a 'mandate' in this vital matter," he said.

Shafer said announcement had been made in his home city, Battle Creek, Mich., that a tractor manufacturing company there was to be taken over by the Government and removed to Arthurdale, W. Va., to be operated as a co-operative undertaking by Arthurdale homesteaders. He added:

"According to the announcement made in Battle Creek—significantly no announcement was made in Washington—the Government through the Farm Security Administration will supply $200,000 capital for the Arthurdale farm equipment corporation and will provide another $125,000 for the construction of the plant and purchase of equipment."

The Michigan Republican said also that word had come to him of "a New Deal scheme" to use relief appropriations in establishing "a group of experimental 'yardstick' textile mills in the South."

"There also have been rumors around Washington about plans for establishing 'yardstick' steel mills," he related.

"The use of this term 'yardstick' is but a disguise to cover the real objective of these undertakings which is to Sovietize American industry in the same manner that Secretary Wallace has been Sovietizing American agriculture.

"When the TVA power projects were authorized we were told they were to be nothing more than 'yardsticks' with which to measure the efficiency of the privately owned electrical utilities.

"Today we know that the 'yardstick' argument as far as the electrical utilities are concerned is a farce. The Government openly is engaging in competition with privately owned utilities and as result has strangled further progress and development in the important public utility field. That is one of the major contributing causes of the current depression."

Over 1,000 Strikes Averted, Settled By Labor Board

By the Associated Press.

The Labor Relations Board said today that requests for elections to determine collective bargaining agencies constituted 53 per cent of the cases it handled in the fiscal year ended June 30.

A total of 1,100,498 workers was involved in the election cases, compared with 1,039,068 involved in cases charging unfair labor practices.

The board said it averted or settled 1,058 strikes in the fiscal year, and as a result of its action more than 88,000 workers were reinstated after strikes or lockouts.

Still Going Wrong, Corrigan Eludes His Escort Again

Milwaukee, Aug. 21 (AP).—Douglas Corrigan made a one-man conquest of Milwaukee today as thousands hailed his three-point landing from the wrong direction and showered him with gay affection upon his every appearance.

"Every city has sent an escort plane to meet me, and none of them has found me yet," Corrigan grinned.

John Cudahy, of Milwaukee, United States minister to Ireland, Corrigan's host in Dublin, missed the airport reception because he went to church first and then got caught in the traffic jam at the airport.

WPA Fund Sought For Schoolbooks

A proposal that the Works Progress Administration allot $10,000,000 for purchase of school textbooks to revive employment in that industry was advanced yesterday by John B. Haggerty, president of the International Allied Printing Trades Association.

In urging the project as a proper unemployment relief undertaking for the WPA, Haggerty pointed out that his A. F. of L. organization already has expended almost $100,000,000 of its own funds to aid jobless members of five affiliated international unions, which otherwise would have had to come from public agencies.

Colored Population Is Faced With Job Crisis, Johnson Finds

MAJ. CAMPBELL C. JOHNSON.

Secretary of Twelfth Street Y. M. C. A. Believes Housing Here Is Another Major Problem for Members of His Race.

By Christine Sadler

Unemployment, with no prospect for re-employment, is the outstanding problem facing Washington's colored population today, in the opinion of Maj. Campbell C. Johnson, executive secretary of the Twelfth Street Y. M. C. A. and social service expert.

Although the percentage of colored persons in the District totals slightly more than 25 per cent, above 50 per cent of persons registered with the employment service are colored—making the problem of distinct racial significance.

Johnson does not find that the percentage increase has been caused principally by migration during the depression years and doubts that the migration of colored persons to the Capital during the depression has been proportionately as great as in former years.

Extraordinary Problem.

"It has been caused in part by changes in employment policy and in part by the fact that this community has a definite level of employment for colored persons. Our problem is more extraordinary than in some other places because we are not waiting for any factory to open up, or for business to get better. Business is good in the District. The Government has more employes, and department stores and other places of business are active," he points out.

Johnson believes, along with others of his race, that the community will have to work out some plan to remedy the situation. He thinks it is something for the District Commissioners to consider, as well as for other District leaders to think about.

"The colored leaders are eager and willing to consider any constructive program. I don't believe anybody appreciates the need for getting the disproportionate number of colored persons off relief than they do," he declares.

Hesitating to compare the situation with that facing colored persons in other cities, Johnson expressed the opinion that "we probably are a little more impotent here because we do not have suffrage."

Housing he sees as the second biggest colored problem in Washington. The Alley Dwelling Authority's program is beginning to have a real effect, he finds; but the rents colored persons have to pay "are still out of all proportion to what they get." He hopes to see a large FHA housing development for the colored modeled along lines of Falkland and Colonial Village.

A native of Washington, Johnson interrupted his college education to participate in the World War as a captain. Upon his return, he organized the R. O. T. C. at Howard University, was professor of military science and tactics at that school, and was commissioned a major. He still teaches at Howard, but today as an instructor in social service; for after he had completed literary and law courses and tried legal practice for two years, he became convinced he liked the social field better.

He has been executive secretary of the Twelfth Street "Y" since 1923. The "Y" was organized in 1853 by a colored Government clerk. Its first members were made up mostly of free colored persons who lived and worked in the District. It is the oldest colored "Y" in the world.

Active in Civic Work.

Johnson is on the board of almost every large community welfare organization in Washington—the Family Service Association, the Council of Social Agencies, the Community Chest, the Washington Housing Association, and the Southwest Community House being among them. He has been secretary for the Capital Unit of the Community Chest every year since its organization. He helped organize the Southeast House and the Northwest Settlement House, is on the board of the Industrial Bank of Washington, and is president of the Francis Junior High Home and School Association.

On Wednesday—Dr. Howard Payne, tuberculosis specialist and civic leader, will be next in the "Working for Washington" series.

'Policy Players' Find Hines Trial Numbers 'Lucky'

New York, Aug. 21 (AP).—Policy players either attend the trial of James J. Hines, Tammany leader, accused of conspiring to conduct and protect the numbers game, or they are avid readers of the trial digest.

Arrested as possessor of 14 slips bearing what police said were 315 policy numbers, Francis Pedro, 42, a porter, was held in bail of $500 today by Magistrate Anna M. Kross for a hearing Tuesday.

All the numbers on the slips, police said, were mentioned by witnesses at the Hines trial during the week.

Money in Music To Keep Oregon Official in Politics

And that's why Victor Aloysius Meyers, who hopped from a dance band platform into the lieutenant governor's chair eight years ago, hopped back last night, temporarily, at least.

He led his new dance orchestra in a Seattle ballroom debut, and said that, hereafter, he was going to keep one foot on the political rostrum and the other on the orchestra plaform, so that he and Mrs. Vic and Vic, jr., and little Mary Louise can eat.

Meyers philosophized that music hath charms to soothe the empty tummy. Furthermore, it bringeth the wherewithal to finance future political campaigns.

If Not 'Purged,' O'Connor May Rule the House

Colleagues See Him as Possible Speaker, With Republican Aid.

Copyright, 1938, by the United Press.

President Roosevelt's campaign to send Representative O'Connor (Democrat), of New York, chairman of the powerful Rules Committee, to the political guillotine, may touch off a history-making struggle for control of the House next session.

Members of Congress back in the Capital last night awaiting the November elections predict privately that if O'Connor can counteract the Presidential purge and win re-election, he will be made leader of a conservative Democratic-Republican coalition which may have life and death power over future New Deal legislation.

O'Connor's committee, known as the "third house of Congress," is called the traffic policeman of the lower chamber. It has sole power to expedite flow of important bills to the floor.

The group incurred Mr. Roosevelt's wrath because for more than a year it refused to report the wage-hour bill.

Primarily, however, Presidential disfavor was extended to O'Connor because he boldly opposed Mr. Roosevelt's cherished Government reorganization bill, which he fought as an invasion of Congressional powers. He voted for the wage-hour bill.

Has Strong Backing.

Some members of Congress are convinced that a victory for the New Yorker would put him in line as a candidate for Speaker of the House or as majority leader.

He is running for renomination on both the Democratic and Republican tickets. The latter party now has only 90 seats in the House, but the national committee claims it will retrieve at least 75 in coming elections. If true, O'Connor probably could count on this support.

Beaten in a hot battle for the House majority leadership last session by Representative Rayburn (Democrat), Texas, who was supported by Vice President Garner, he might be able to line up sufficient support to defeat Rayburn or even Speaker Bankhead.

Last "Upset" in 1921.

The last "upset" in the customary procedure for picking committee slates in the House occurred in 1921, when the late Representative Madden (Republican), Illinois, successfully won the chairmanship of the powerful Appropriations Committee in a Republican caucus over then Representative Davis (Republican), Minnesota, who outranked him in seniority.

Yesterday O'Connor claimed he has perhaps the "most consistent voting record in the House of any Democrat" in supporting the Administration's legislation, voting "off" only on the reorganization bill.

He said his committee blocked the wage-hour bill over "my strongest opposition," but meantime it killed "hundreds of anti-Administration bills."

Mexico's Income Too Low to Pay For Oil Seizures

By the Associated Press.

The foreign Policy Association published the conclusion yesterday that there seemed to be no possibility of Mexico being able to pay for the British and American-owned oil properties it has expropriated.

In a report published by the association, a private research organization, Charles A. Thomson said that even if settlement were made upon the basis of the $100,000,000 valuation fixed by Mexico the southern republic would have to use a tenth of its annual revenue to meet installments on the debt. The writer explained that annual revenue for Mexico under the Cardenas administration was about $100,000,000.

"There seems no possibility of obtaining $10,000,000 or anything near it from Mexico's oil exports," Thomson added.

'Isms' Inquiry May Summon Hugh Johnson

By the Associated Press.

Johnson, former NRA administrator and later Works Progress administrator in New York City, might be called as one of the concluding witnesses at the committee's hearings, members said. They added they hoped to obtain from him results of any investigations he had contducted into extent of communism among Government employes.

Radicals' Critic.

The former Army officer now is out of the New Deal and has been critical of what he has called recent radical trends.

Dr. J. B. Matthews, writer and educator, who told the committee Saturday that the World Youth Congress meeting at Vassar College was Moscow-controlled, had a bodyguard yesterday at his downtown hotel. He had reported receiving threats of violence if he persisted in testifying further today about alleged inner workings of the Communist Party.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, whose name was mentioned by Matthews as one of those exploited by Communists in their "United Front" activities, addressed the Youth Congress last week.

Denying that the First Lady had been exploited, Dr. Henry N. MacCracken, president of Vassar, commented that the House inquiry was a "campaign" investigation which would turn into a boomerang.

Dubs It "Witch Scare."

"Witch scares are bound to make the public angry," he said.

The committee has yet to hear the testimony of several Brooklyn University professors and teachers subpenaed to relate the rise of communism there as part of the alleged movement to infiltrate American colleges, youth organizatios and societies with Communist or Communist-directed doctrine. Other witnesses will be summoned later to testify regarding this field of activity, committee investigators said.

Inquiry Needs Funds.

By the United Press.

Chairman Dies of the House committee investigating un-American activities, said last night that he would urge Congress to broaden scope of the inquiry to expose further alien aims that are profundly affecting our social political and economic system."

He said that the $25,000 which the last Congress appropriated for the inquiry is becoming exhausted and that sufficient funds must be forthcoming to "properly organize and conduct this investigation."

Dies' statement was issued after ten days of public hearings which, he said, demonstrated that foreign governments are attempting to transfer "their quarrels and isms to our shores" through numerous "front" organizations which conceal their true purposes from the rank and file members.

"The testimony we have heard thus far reveals a startling situation which should arouse the active interest and concern of all patriotic citizens," he said. "This testimony indicates that foreign governments, with political systems wholly at variance with ours, are influencing, if not directing, the policies and activities of certain organizations in the United States, and that these foreign governments are using these organizations and their memberships as 'fronts' to advance their interest and cause in the United States and to transfer their quarrels and isms to our shores.

Effect Profound.

"Of course, some of this testimony must be discounted because of a natural tendency to exaggerate. But after making due allowances the fact appears to remain that the infiltration of alien influences and ideas threatens to produce a profound effect upon our social, political and economic system."

Dies said that the committee had been bombarded with telegrams and letters urging a "fearless inquiry" but that lack of funds had prevented employment of an adequate staff. "We don't even have enough stenographers to answer the inquiries," he said. "If we had sufficient funds properly to organize and conduct this investigation, it seems probable, from what has already developed and from information which we have not made public, that the revelations would astound the nation and produce the most wholesome results."

The committee expects to conclude hearings in Washington about mid-week. It then will transfer its activities to other Eastern cities and later to the West Coast.

May Call Bridges.

Members indicated that Australian-born Harry Bridges, C. I. O. leader on the Pacific Coast, will be called to testify at San Francisco regarding charges by a committee investigator that a high Labor Department official "protected" him while efforts were being made to deport him as an alien and Communist.

He probably will be asked also about allegations that an attorney, allegedly representing him, offered a witness a $500 bribe to flee to Mexico so that he would not disclose his alleged communistic connections. Bridges has denied he is a Communist.

Would Answer Matthews.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Aug. 21 (AP). Asserting the House committee investigating "un-American" activities is "wasting taxpayers' money" and its "own valuable time," the World Youth Congress today requested that its representatives be permitted to testify before the group in Washington.

The action was in reply to statements made by Dr. J. M. Matthews, writer and educator, who told the Dies committee yesterday that the World Youth Congress was Moscow-controlled.

Big Business Fears Monopoly As Prelude to U. S. Regulation

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 21.—The National Industrial Conference Board, a research organization supported chiefly by large corporations, said yesterday a survey it had conducted of executive opinion on large-scale enterprise indicated a predominant view that free competition and economic laws effectively would control the size of big business.

The consensus, the board reported, favored Government intervention to regulate the size of business units "only where monopolistic and price-fixing agreements exist."

"It was the majority opinion," the board said, "that large-scale enterprise offers many advantages and economies, particularly in industries such as the steel and automotive where a large capital investment is required, but that in many activities business has grown unwieldly and uneconomical."

Trend to Collectivism.

"Most business men are apparently alive to the danger of Government collectivism or socialism, if business units in all fields tend to reach the size of public rather than private enterprises.

"It was generally agreed that as the size of business units increases, the trend is toward business collectivism, and the next step is governmental collectivism or control of all business activity.

"As to the extent to which governmental control should exist, various suggestions were made by business men. The dissolution of big business into smaller units should be accomplished by governmental coercion, if business does not act voluntarily; the Government should formulate a code of industrial ethics to control labor policies, monopolistic practices, surplus profits and executives' earnings; maintenance of free competition and abolition of price-fixing agreements are governmental functions.

"Other business men maintained that free competition and economic laws are sufficient to purge industry of undesirable elements, without the intervention of Government."

Mass Marketing Sales.

Cited in the arguments for large-scale enterprise were:

"Mass marketing, with more extensive advertising and advantages in reciprocity, leads to increased sales by big business. Also the greater stability, mass purchasing power and assembly-like production techniques of large companies often result in lower prices to the consumer.

"It was generally thought that large operations showed greater price stability, with tax economies and more efficient management contributing to substantial profits and a net gain in national income. Big business finds it easier to obtain capital and also to deal with labor organizations, according to executive opinion. From the investors' viewpoint, large enterprises are often favored because of the diversification represented.

"Practically all executives agreed that big business has rendered definite service to the public in fostering research and that industrial progress would be hampered without the large sums spent on research and technical development by big companies."

Mentioning "bad features," the report said.

"Big business, with its concentration of power, tends to disregard public opinion and to sap the independent spirit of individually controlled business while big companies spend lavishly on public relations to influence popular esteem, according to some opinions expressed to the conference board.

Freshman competitive scholarships at the University of Pennsylvania have been granted Alexander S. Young, jr., 4934 Upton street northwest, and Granville Munson, jr., 2705 Thirty-fourth place northwest.

Pope, in Talk With President, May Run Again

Defeated Idaho Senator Considers New Race After Parley.

By the United Press.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Aug. 21.—President Roosevelt today swung the New Deal spotlight on Idaho, and, as a result, Senator Pope, ardent Administration supporter, recently defeated in the primaries for renomination, may run as an independent.

The Chief Executive canvassed the far Western political situation with Pope, who was a guest at the summer White House, and the latter admitted that they touched briefly on possibility of his re-entering the field.

"I have made no decision in the matter and I do not expect to until I return home," he told newspapermen who found him with the President on a baseball field at Pawling, N. Y., watching a game between Lowell Thomas' Nine Old Men and the "White House Purgers," consisting of correspondents, cameramen and Secret Service operatives.

The conference, however, took on added significance when it was learned that Harry Hopkins and Aubrey Williams, WPA chieftains, were also at Hyde Park. Hopkins is emerging more and more as the No. 1 political adviser to the President, and some persons believe that his status now equals that of Postmaster General James A. Farley.

Some of the more militant New Dealers feel that Pope represents the "advanced progressive views" necessary to carry forward Administration policies, and, therefore, should run. Pope, who was defeated in the primaries by Representative Worth Clark after he had been indorsed both by Farley and Secretary of State Hull, told newspapermen that he discussed politics and the agricultural situation. He is interested in the proposal for a wheat subsidy to help dispose of surplus, but he did not take up that question with the President.

500,000,000 Pass Rides

JUST whose fertile brain first thought of the weekly pass, that great boon to city transportation users, may be disputed by future historians.

There is no room for argument, however, over the statement that Washington is one of a small group of American cities that enjoy this cheapest and handiest of fares.

And how Washington has taken to the pass!

In a little more than four and one-half years 15,634,000 passes have been sold. Patrons using them have taken 501,442,000 rides.

Astounding figures!

Yes, but after all it is small wonder the pass has proved so popular. A pass buyer gets so much for his $1.25.

1. All the rides he cares to take from 5 A.M. one Sunday to 5 A.M. the next Sunday.
2. Something anyone in the family—bearer in fact—may use.
3. Sundays and holidays he may take along two children under 12 at no extra cost.
4. Pass bearers don't have to dig for dimes or tokens. When they buy a pass, their fare transactions for a week are over.

Try a pass next week end. A little experience with this low cost transportation will convince you of its unequalled value.

Street car and bus operators sell them.

Auto, Textile and Maritime C. I. O. Units Expected to Get Competitors.

By the Associated Press.

Atlantic City, N. J., Aug. 21.—Leaders of the American Federation of Labor, meeting here this week, intend to study what purport to be confidential reports on internal troubles in C. I. O. unions.

This was learned tonight from federation officers gathering to draft the annual report for the A. F. of L. national convention at Houston in October.

While none of the A. F. of L. high command would forecast what might follow such studies, it is no secret the federation would like to set up its own organizations, when it finds conditions favorable, in fields now monopolized by the C. I. O.

C. I. O. unions whose "internal situation" will come under scrutiny, it was said, include the United Auto Workers, the Textile Workers and the National Maritime Union.

The federation's interest in organization problems of the C. I. O. is expected to center on the current factional leadership fight in the United Auto Workers Union.

The auto union once was in the A. F. of L. fold, but was suspended and expelled after it shifted its allegiance to the C. I. O.

A factional dispute over leadership of the National Maritime Union also has drawn A. F. of L. attention because the federation is starting a new broad-scale organization of its own in the maritime industry.

Likewise, the federation, now laying the foundation for what it hopes will be a new international union of textile workers, has kept a watchful eye on activities of C. I. O. textile leaders.

Martin to Sign Up Ford.

Cleveland, Aug. 21 (U.P.).—President Homer Martin, of the United Automobile Workers Union predicted today that Henry Ford will sign a U. A. W. contract "sometime during the 1939 production season."

Martin made his prophesy before a regional meeting of 191 officers representing 35 Ohio local unions.

No mention was made of the rebellion against Martin and his supporters by a faction led by four vice presidents "purged" by the union head for "conspiracy."

Revolt Against TWOA.

Providence, R. I., Aug. 21 (U.P.).—The Federation of Woolen and Worsted Workers of America today threw its support to a revolt against allegedly high-handed methods of the textile workers organizing committee, powerful C. I. O. affiliate.

Some 250 delegates to a special conference of the federation unanimously approved recommendations proposed by President Francis Gorman of the United Textile Workers of America to "salvage" the textile organization from "self-constituted" leaders.

Though Gorman studiously avoided names in criticising the TWOC leadership, several delegates made pointed references to Sidney Hillman, national TWOC chairman.

Gorman denied rumors he would lead a secession movement with the object of affiliating with the American Federation of Labor.

Civil Air Bureau Starts Work Today On Airport Study

By the United Press.

The newly-created Civil Aeronautics Authority today assumes sweeping control over civil aviation in the United States.

The CAA, newest in the alphabetical array of New Deal agencies, takes over functions which have been exercised by three arms of government—the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Postoffice Department and the Bureau of Air Commerce of the Department of Commerce.

The CAA henceforth will fix air transportation rates, standards for the Nation's 20,067 licensed pilots, supervise airway safety and handle air mail contracts. A five-man board, headed by Edward J. Noble, of Connecticut, has been at work several weeks. Its first task is to recommend to Congress before February 1 whether the Federal Government should start construction of a Nation-wide system of airfields.

Dictator Indorses Woman Suffrage For San Domingo

San Juan, Puerto Rico, Aug. 21 (U.P.).—Doris Stevens, American feminist, said today she had converted Rafael L. Trujillo Molina, dictator of the Dominican Republic to enfranchisement of Dominican women.

En route to New York from Trujillo City, the Washington chairman of the Inter-American Commission of Women predicted Dominican feminists would, press immediately for a constitutional amendment granting them suffrage.

Invited to Trujillo City by Trujillo, Miss Stevens said she clinched the case for Dominican women by pointing out that more than 400,000 of them voted for Trujillo in the last presidential election, although their votes were unconstitutional.

Sacco-Vanzetti Attorney's Book To Name 'Guilty'

Pittsburgh, Aug. 21 (AP).—Judge Michael A. Musmanno, of the Common Pleas Court, who has long contended that the famous Sacco-Vanzetti trial in Boston was "framed," said today he would publish a book this fall in which he will "prove their innocence" and "name the guilty persons."

The judge, who entered the case for three days and remained in Boston three months as attorney for Bartolomeo Vanzetti and Nicola Sacco, said his 300-page book would contain many "inside details" of the case never before printed.

The two men were electrocuted in August 22, 1927, for a pay roll robbery and murder.

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Floyd Hamilton (left), Nation's No. 1 desperado, still smiles through gritted teeth, his leg shattered by a bullet, in jail at Dallas, Tex. At right, surly Ted Walters, Hamilton's partner in crime, puffs cigarette after cigarette following capture by a posse that ended a week-long manhunt.

which led F. B. I. men to the hideout.

The Federal men broke into the place and found only Hamilton. While they were questioning him, he broke away and fled toward the river bottom, where the G-men lost track of him.

Meanwhile Walters was picked up by three Dallas policemen, C. O. Buchanan, J. E. Daniel and F. T. Keith, in a downtown parking lot. He also was afoot and unarmed.

The capture of Hamilton ends temporarily at least the career of crime of one of the most notorious gangs of bandits, kidnapers and killers in the recent history of the Southwest.

Ray Hamilton's Brother.

Hamilton's older brother, Ray Hamilton, was a member of the famous Barrow-Hamilton gang which included Clyde Barrow, famous "two gun" man from the Cookson Hills country of Oklahoma, and "Pretty Boy" Floyd, who was killed by G-Men in Ohio in 1934.

Hamilton and Barrow parted shortly before Barrow and his gun-toting girl companion, Bonnie Parker, were killed in a battle with a sheriff's posse in northern Louisiana in 1934.

Ray Hamilton and his brother, Floyd, were accused of having violated the "bad man's code" by tipping off authorities as to where they could find Barrow and his girl friend. Later the Hamilton brothers were jailed, and escaped early in 1935.

Both were captured, Floyd being taken from a bus near Dallas, unarmed and with a bullet wound in his side. Ray Hamilton was executed in a Texas penitentiary, and Floyd was sentenced to Leavenworth.

After his release he worked in a refinery, which later closed down. Out of work, he turned to small-time robbery. He was charged with stealing truck tires at Waxahachie, Tex., and later he was arrested at Montague, Tex., and charged with burglary. He escaped with Walters from the Montague jail.

Girls Captured.

The pair ran into a squad of State troopers near De Queen and shot their way out of a trap. They escaped through the woods and apparently beat their way southward by freight trains.

Earlier their two sweethearts, Mary Lou Weber and Ruby May Walters, were captured near Summit, Ill., and Hoover then sent out word that Hamilton and Walters topped the list of bad men wanted by the Department of Justice.

Although the old Barrow-Hamilton gang was accused of 11 specific murders and numerous bank robberies and kidnapings, the younger Hamilton brother was not believed to have been implicated in many of these crimes, and none actually was pinned on him.

Both Hamilton and Walters were members of the gang, and they were accused also of holding up a bank in Bradley, Ark., shortly after they escaped from prison the last time, as well as robbing a beverage factory near Nashville, Ark.

A bank robbery at Woodriver, Ill., near where their two girl companions were captured, also was attributed to the pair.

Both were held incommunicado in jail here, and Marshall was questioned to find out whether the two bandits had dropped information about any other members of the original gang.

Krueger Servant's Husband Won't Confess Shooting

Hollywood, Aug. 21 (AP).—Accused of shooting Mrs. Emita Krueger in a jealous rage, Charles McDonald, 30-year-old jobless electrician, today refused to sign what police said was the transcript of an oral confession.

Mrs. Krueger, wife of Karl Krueger, symphony orchestra leader, showed no improvement. Three bullets entered her body. She was so weak late today doctors were unable to complete X-ray examinations they were making.

McDonald, after talking to his lawyer, William Bronsten, in jail, said he would have nothing more to say about the shooting.

Because of the uncertainty in the condition of Mrs. Krueger no immediate arraignment of McDonald is planned unless his attorney demands it.

Chicago, Aug. 21 (AP).—Tears seeping from Mary Reardon's big blue eyes made her parents hope today their child would arouse from her long, unbroken slumber. The golden-haired girl, a victim of sleeping sickness, will begin her sixth month of stupor this week. She will be 3 years old October 17.

German-Ousted English Officer Now in Budapest

Budapest, Hungary, Aug. 21 (AP). Capt. Thomas Kendrick, British passport officer at Vienna who was expelled from Germany on charges of espionage, arrived here with his wife last night.

The Kendricks probably will go to London shortly to avoid the political complications their stay here might cause.

Maryland Resident Suffers Tick Fever

A 53-year-old Maryland man was in a serious condition at Georgetown Hospital yesterday, suffering from Rocky Mountain spotted fever. The man, George Kuster, of Rockville pike, is the sixth person in this area to have been attacked by the disease this year. Two have died from the fever in the past two months.

Polish Troops Asked to Keep Danzig Order

By the Associated Press.

Gdynia, Poland, Aug. 21.—A demand for Polish troops to be sent to Danzig "to re-establish order" was made today at two anti-Nazi demonstrations at this Polish seaport 18 miles from the Free City.

The Polish League of the West, a strongly anti-German group, organized the meetings as a result of two incidents in Danzig involving Polish nationals.

It was estimated 7,000 gathered to hear the anti-Nazi protests of the "methods of barbarism applied by the National Socialist authorities of Danzig to members of the Polish minority."

A threatened march on Danzig by demonstrators was canceled when leaders declared: "If the government will not bring order we will do so ourselves."

Appeals Sent President.

Resolutions adopted demanded Nazi officials of the Free City change their attitude toward the Polish minority and that the Free City submit itself to Poland according to the Versailles Treaty.

Telegrams were dispatched immediately to Ignace Moscicki, president of the Polish Republic, and Marsh Edward Smigly-Rydz, inspector general of the army, asking they dispatch troops to Danzig.

The incidents occurred last week when two Polish boys were reported to have been attacked by a group of Sa men (Storm Troopers) and a Polish railroad employe tossed off a train by two National Socialists during a political argument. The railway employe lost both legs.

Meanwhile, it was reported 100 Polish citizens of German nationality have been arrested in the frontier area from Danzig to Kattowitz for anti-Polish propaganda.

Soviet Farm Show Put Off 2d Year; Wreckers Blamed

Moscow, Aug. 21.—The Soviet Union's agricultural exhibition, scheduled to open August 1, tonight was formally postponed for another year by the closing session of the Supreme Soviet (Parliament). The exhibition originally was planned for 1937.

Nikita C. Khruschev, secretary of the Communist Party for the Ukraine, charged that "wrecking" had hampered both planning of the exhibit and erection of pavilions.

The postponement was not believed to have any connection with this year's crop prospects. Dry weather is still unbroken, but foreign observers predict that, even if the grain crop fails to come up to early expectations, it will still be more than adequate for the nation's needs.

The Supreme Soviet in this second session afforded fuller discussion of the country's policies than any Soviet parliament has for many years. It ratified the new budget, established a new judical structure for the Soviet Union and approved new taxes on horses belonging to farmers still uncollectivized.

Dewey Hopes To Show Hines 'Owned' Judge

Will Offer Evidence to Link Magistrate to Policy Racket.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 21.—Mention of the name of a second public official who the State assents was "influenced, intimidated or bribed" by Tammany District Leader James J. Hines was expected to touch off a verbal battle tomorrow in the political chieftain's trial on racket conspiracy charges.

District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey indicated his first witness of the trial's second week would link Hulon Capshaw, suspended magistrate, to some of the influence the prosecutor accuses Hines of exercising for the protection of the policy racket once dominated by the slain gangster, Dutch Schultz.

Name Hinted Before.

Alexander Pompez, Dewey's last witness before the week-end adjournment Friday, apparently started to blurt out Capshaw's name as the magistrate who dismissed charges against a number of persons arrested in a policy raid, but Supreme Court Justice Ferdinand Pecora ordered it stricken out until Dewey laid a foundation for connecting Capshaw to the case.

Pompez, colored, large-scale policy banker for several years, got only so far as "Cap——" before the judge stopped him. He will be recalled as the first witness tomorrow, Dewey said.

Hines' counsel, led by Lloyd Paul Stryker, conferred with their client over the week-end and later indicated they would strenuously oppose the prosecutor's attempts to inject Capshaw's name into the case. They failed earlier, however, to keep out the name of the late magistrate. Francis Erwin, who, a witness testified, dismissed charges against 42 policy defendants.

Capshaw, Erwin and former District Attorney William C. Dodge were the three public officials accused in Dewey's bill of particulars of having been "reached" by Hines.

Proof Promised.

Of the first 12 State witnesses, only three have mentioned Hines in their testimony. This has brought numerous objections from Stryker, which led Dewey to this reply once: "You may accept the people's assurance that there will be abundant corroborating proof."

Trial observers assumed this to mean the corroboration would come this week from J. Richard "Dixie" Davis, one-time lawyer for Schultz who inherited the numbers racket after the gangster's slaying three years ago.

Decency Unit Wars On Immoral Films

Cincinnati, Aug. 21 (AP).—Archbishop John T. McNicholas, chairman of the National Legion of Decency's Episcopal Committee on Motion Pictures, declared the Legion would challenge any movie program exploiting "false, atheistic and immoral doctrines."

The legion," he said, "views with grave apprehension those efforts now being made to utilize the cinema for the spread of ideas antagonistic, not only to traditional Christian morality, but to all religion."

Coal Producers Ordered To Suggest Prices, Rules

By the Associated Press.

The Bituminous Coal Commission ordered producers' boards in 10 Central, Southwestern and Southern States yesterday to file proposed minimum prices and marketing rules and regulations for their coal by September 14.

The commission said that with this order all producers' boards in the United States had received instructions to propose prices and rules and regulations.

National Geographic Explorers Find World's Largest Glacier

Parent of Three Great Alaskan Ice Rivers Discovered on Flight Behind Coastal Mountains; Mass Second Only to Polar Cap.

(Bradford Washburn is the 27-year-old leader of the National Geographic-Harvard University expedition to the glaciers of the St. Elias Mountains of Alaska.—Editor's note.)

By Bradford Washburn.

Written for the Associated Press.

Cordova, Alaska, Aug. 21.—The National Geographic-Harvard University expedition yesterday discovered without question the largest glacier system in the world outside the polar ice caps.

We landed at Cordova yesterday afternoon after a wonderfully successful flight down the backbone of the St. Elias Range.

The purpose of the flight was to discover the source of the huge Bering glacier which flows almost to the sea 100 miles west of Mount St. Elias.

Last week with Pilot Bob Reeve of Valdez we explored the extreme western limits of what appeared to be an enormous glacier connecting Bering Glacier with Malaspina Glacier.

Yesterday's flight, during which we flew completely around Mount Logan and Mount St. Elias, the second and third highest peaks in North America, definitely proved Bering, Seward and Malaspina glaciers are connected by a huge river of ice.

This vast mass of glacier is from 5,000 to 7,000 feet high and over 100 miles long. It is completely hidden from view behind the coastal mountain ranges.

Others on the expedition flight were Dr. G. D. Hanna, geologist with the California Academy of Science, San Francisco; Garrett Eddy, Seattle, and Pilot Harold Gillam.

We made a complete photographic record of the glacier discovery from altitudes ranging up to 15,000 feet. The flight took more than six hours.

Aside from our photographs and discoveries, Dr. Hanna has made tremendously interesting geological discoveries about formations in the heart of the St. Elias Range.

This flight has been anticipated and prepared for months. The ends of these great, well-known glaciers were so huge we were almost certain they had a common gathering ground.

Our discovery of this great ice field proves the combined glacier system of the St. Elias Range is a mammoth expanse of unbroken ice several thousand feet deep stretching almost from Cape St. Elias southward and eastward for 235 miles to the Alsek River Valley.

Doctor Argues Poison Is Proof Wife Was Suicide

Leclede, Mo., Aug. 21 (AP).—Counsel for Dr. William LaMance argued today that a chemist's report of poison in the viscera of his wife proved her death a suicide, but prosecutors answered that the finding did not bar murder and said the investigation would continue.

The 32-year-old osteopath was charged with murder after his pretty 29-year-old wife was found dead in a vegetable cellar behind their home here last week.

G. Derk Green, prosecutor, denied a charge by Dr. LaMance's attorney, Lon R. Owen, that a State chemist had reported poison and that he was withholding the information to bolster his case.

Board Suggests 22% Boost in D.C. Water Rate

Rise If 'Appropriate' to Pay for Improvements to Cost 28 Millions.

District Commissioners this week will consider a report advising a 22 per cent increase in local water rates if the city's water system itself is to pay for far-reaching improvements to meet anticipated growth of population.

If present charges for use of water are maintained, the board of survey found, the District will have to find outside funds to finance new reservoirs, mains, pumps and filtration facilities which have been suggested for construction by 1953, at a cost of $28,000,000.

Although making no recommendations as to how expansion of the system should be financed, the report suggests a revised rate schedule, "if authorities deem it appropriate charged for water to provide revenue sufficient for proposed future capital improvements."

Such a schedule would call for a minimum charge of $2, on a quarterly basis, and $8 on an annual basis, with a metered alloyance of 1,000 cubic feet for three months and 4,000 feet for a year. (Present charge is $8.75 a year for an allowance of 7,500 feet.)

"WE KNOW FINER TOBACCOS— WE SMOKE CAMELS"

JOHN T. BONE (left) knows tobacco because he grows it. He says: "From experience, I know Camel buys finer tobaccos. Camel bought my best lots last season. I smoke Camels because I know I'm getting finer tobaccos. Most planters I know smoke Camels for the same reason."

THE "THOUSAND CIGARETTE TEST." Before it comes to you, every Camel cigarette goes through rigid tests to make sure that it is a perfect cigarette—plump, firm, full weight—and that each and every Camel gives you exactly the same matchless blend of finer, costlier tobaccos—Turkish and Domestic. Try Camels. You'll find them better for steady smoking. As proof of their quality, they are the world's largest-selling cigarette.

to be needed and the others were sold to the company and in the end found their way to Japan.

"And now we hear," he continued, " of a big dinner recently given in honor of Mr. Tydings by Mr. Shapiro, president of the Boston Iron and Metal Co., and the Arrow Brewery. This was a political dinner and the purpose was to pay off Mr. Tydings for his political help. I have also just heard that Mr. Shapiro donated $5,000 to the Tydings campaign fund."

Answering Tydings' charge of terrorism among Federal officeholders, Lewis said:

"Now let us see what is drawing such moans of anguish from Millard. There are certain Federal appointments which have always been looked upon as Federal "political plums." The present incumbents were given to Mr. Tydings by the President at a time when the President expected to have the friendly co-operation of a Democratic Senator from Maryland. Tydings picked men who had been active in politics and he did this for the express purpose of advancing his political fortunes. They were, or he hoped they would be, his personal political machine.

"Now the terms of office of several of them have expired. They have been in office some time and it seems to me I remember some remarks by Mr. Tydings in 1934 about long continuation in office. He at that time was trying to purge Gov. Ritchie.

Job's Daughters Are Here Today

Wardman Park Registration to Start Convention for 1,500 Members.

Registration opens today at 10 a. m. at the Wardman Park Hotel for the eighteenth annual session of the supreme guardian council, Order of Job's Daughters. Arrangements for the convention, which will bring 1,500 members and delegates to Washington, have been made by William J. Dunham as general chairman and Louis Carl, supreme outer guard of the organization, as vice chairman.

Mrs. Laura Wallace, past grand guardian of the District of Columbia, spent yesterday at Wardman Park Theater directing final rehearsals for the all-States pageant to be presented tomorrow night at 8:30. Girls coming in from other sections, who are representing their parts of the country in the spectacle, practiced their roles with those who have been rehearsing here. Among those from distant places was Jean Stowe, of Saskatchewan, who will be "Miss Canada." She will also present the British flag in the opening ceremony tomorrow morning. There will be a welcome at this session by L. P. Stuart, grand master of the Masonic Order of the District of Columbia.

This afternoon at 1 o'clock, Bethel, 1, of Washington, will conduct a special initiation at which girls from the District and from many States will be taken into the order. Later, there will be a visit to the International Temple of the Order of the Eastern Star at 1618 New Hampshire avenue.

Early this morning, a group of 25 Job's Daughters will arrive from Michigan, home State of Mrs. Elizabeth L. Warden, supreme guardian. Mrs. Grace E. Catterfield, grand matron of the Michigan grand chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, and past grand guardian of Job's Daughters for the State, has already arrived to participate in the convention sessions.

Wednesday afternoon, a bathing beauty contest will feature the entertainment. Thursday morning a trip to Mount Vernon has been arranged, in charge of Mr. Carl, and a visit to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. Mrs. Warden will place a wreath there and also at George Washington's tomb. The trip to Mount Vernon will include a stop at Washington Alexandria Lodge Room, where the visitors will be served a box lunch prepared by the Virginia Bethels.

Thursday night will be given over to the installation of the new supreme council, headed by Mrs. Virginia Thompson of Hyattsville, Md., as supreme guardian. Maryland Bethels are in charge of arrangements.

Purge Intimidates Workers In Maryland, Tydings Asserts

Tydings

and then reward those who support Mr. Lewis."

Eugene B. Casey, publicity director of the Lewis campaign, announced last week that pro-Tydings officeholders would be swept out if Lewis wins.

Will Fight Purge.

Senator Radcliffe, close friend of President Roosevelt, who is supporting Tydings, has announced that he will fight such a purge on the Senate floor. He added:

"He (Casey) prophesies that the United States Senate will indorse such a purge. The Senate, in my opinion, would most certainly do nothing of the sort, but would, on the contrary, show its emphatic disapproval of such campaign scheming.

"I would certainly ask my associates in the Senate to interpose their unmistakable opposition to such unworthy tactics and I am entirely satisfied they would do so."

Five Facing Ax.

Five holders of important Federal posts are reported to be threatened with the New Deal ax unless they get on the Lewis bandwagon. The commissions of nearly all of them have expired and they are serving as holdovers.

They are United States Marshal Klecka, Collector of the Port Gilbert A. Dailey, United States District Attorney Bernard J. Flynn, Comptroller of Customs S. Scott Beck and Commissioner of Immigration Frank S. Revell.

Earlier yesterday, on the picnic grounds of Chapel Point in Charles County, Tydings addressed a crowd of 500, largely Southern Maryland tobacco planters, and was vigorously applauded when he recalled how he voted against Hugo L. Black's confirmation as a member of the Supreme Court.

Referring to Black's membership in the Ku Klux Klan, Tydings said no man who had shown racial and religious bigotry should be allowed to sit on the highest court in the land.

Tydings said that his opponent, Representative Lewis, had stated that he would have voted to confirm Black even though he knew he once had been a member of the Klan.

"I don't see how anybody could vote for such a man," Tydings said, "but because I didn't, Mr. Lewis says I am not a Democrat."

Warning against the dictator trend in Europe, Tydings asked the crowd: "What do you want your Senator to be?"

"A real man," answered a stentorian voice.

"What kind of Government would there be," Tydings declared, "with 96 Charley McCarthys in the Senate saying 'yes,' 'yes,' 'yes,' and 435 Charley McCarthys in the House of Representatives saying 'yes,' 'yes,' 'yes?' "

Vows Tobacco Tax Fight.

Tydings pledged himself to work for a reduction in tobacco taxes. More than any other type of farmer, he said, the tobacco planter had a "just grievance" against national, State and local governments.

Taking a package of cigarettes from his pocket and holding it up before the crowd, Tydings said:

"Think of it, when a man pays 15 cents for a package of cigarettes, the Government takes 6 cents of it in taxes. One out of every $10 that the Government raises from all forms of taxation comes from one agricultural crop—tobacco. That tobacco tax amounts to $600,000,000 a year."

Tydings said that, acting on reports that tobacco buyers were in collusion to fix the price, he had asked the Senate Anti-monopoly Committee to make an investigation. He read a telegram from Senator O'Mahoney, of Wyoming, chairman of the committee, promising action.

Lansdale G. Sasscer, of Upper Marlboro, one of four candidates for the Democratic nomination for Governor, was on the speaker's platform with Tydings. The latter said that, while he was neutral in the gubernatorial race, he was "particularly glad" to have Sasscer there. He recalled that they both had served in the Army in France and were together in the State Legislature.

Mrs. Tydings, dressed in white, accompanied the Senator. The local Democratic organization had provided crabs and beer for all those at the rally.

U. S. Employes' Convention to Hear Sen. Walsh

Topic of Talk in September to Be Improvement of Civil Service.

"Improvement of the Civil Service System" will be the topic of Senator Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, in an address to be given before the annual convention of the American Federation of Government Employes, beginning in Chicago, September 12.

Legislative aims scheduled for discussion by delegates include a five-day week for the entire Government service, establishment of an independent Civil Service Board of Appeals, automatic salary increases based on length of service, extra pay for night work and extension of the classification act to cover the field services.

"The next session of Congress will hold genuine possibilities for improvement or harming of the Civil Service," Charles I. Stengle, president of the federation, said yesterday, "and it is incumbent on Government workers, particularly those who are members of our organization, to study carefully all proposed legislation and to be prepared to give full support to the A. F. G. E. program."

Delegates from the federation's 71 lodges in the District, as well as branches in 45 States, are expected to be present at the convention. The federation is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

Dreiser Classes Roosevelt With Hitler and Stalin

Boston, Aug. 21 (AP).—Novelist Theodore Dreiser in an interview today classed President Roosevelt with Hitler, Mussolini and Stalin as men for whom the theories of Karl Marx had "made a good thing."

"If there is anything to the theory that it is better to take care of the masses than not to do so—if Communism is deemed better than individualism—he (Roosevelt) will stand out well in the eyes of the future," the 66-year-old writer said. "If not, he and his administration won't look so good."

Queried, after a five weeks' trip abroad, the writer said he had concluded that European leaders would not succeed in changing the people. "This gang soon won't be here, but the people will remain."

Hobbs Family Has Reunion; 90 Are Present

Oldest Is 63, Youngest 7, at Annual Gathering in Silver Spring.

If you had called "Hobbs!" out at Jesup Blair Park in Silver Spring yesterday 90 people would have come running.

All members of the Hobbs family of Colesville, Md., they gathered at the park for their annual reunion, a custom started four years ago. They spent the day eating and playing ball and gossiping about the family's romances and the growth of their relatives' babies.

The 90 grown-ups and children represent three generations of 10 related families, originating with eight brothers and two sisters. Marriages and births and more marriages have increased the tribe to the point that they now could populate a small village.

Oldest Hobbs present was Mrs. Bessie Hobbs Anderson, 63. Youngest who bore the name was 7-year-old Nicky Hobbs, son of Colesville Policeman Jerry Hobbs. Nicky had plenty of younger cousins for company, one of whom was only 4 months of age, but none has a Hobbs for a surname.

The pride the family feels in itself was evidenced by the presence of a large scrapbook, in which have been pasted pictures of previous reunions, graduation certificates, newspaper stories about distinguished Hobbses and records of marriages and births.

The most recent wedding was held last Monday, when Lewis Hobbs, jr., son of Judge Lewis F. Hobbs, of the Orphans Court in Rockville, took as his bride Miss Grace Hoffmaster.

It was the bride's first glimpse of her many new relatives, but she seemed to feel at home with all 90.

Doctor, 3 Taximen Jailed in Torture Of Ex-U.S. Officer

Olympia, Wash., Aug. 21 (AP).—A socially prominent physician and three other men were under arrest today as authorities investigated the torture-beating of Irving Baker, former Coast Guard officer, Prosecutor S. W. Troy said.

Dr. K. W. Berry, 50, whom Troy said admitted the attack; Harold Schars, taxicab operator, and two other men identified only as taxi drivers were held. Dr. Berry and Schars were charged with first degree kidnaping and first degree assault.

Troy said Dr. Berry's jealousy over attentions paid his pretty young wife at a July 4 party motivated the attack upon Baker.

Otto Tittmann Dies; Famous As a Geodesist

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Leesburg, Va., Aug. 21.—Otto Hilgard Tittmann, former superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey and one of America's most prominent geodetists, died suddenly at his home here today—one day after his eighty-eighth birthday.

On his retirement from the Survey, which he headed from 1900 to 1915, Dr. Tittman was named president of the National Geographic Society, a post he held until 1919. He moved to Leesburg from Washington about 20 years ago.

He is survived by one son, Charles Trowbridge Tittmann, noted concert soloist, of 1718 Connecticut avenue.

Born in Belleville, Ill., 11 years before the outbreak of the Civil War, Dr. Tittmann was eduucated in the public schools of St. Louis. In 1867 he entered the United States Coast Survey as an aide.

Although he had had no college training he rose to be assistant astronomer of the expedition to Japan to observe the transit of Venus in 1874. After doing survey work on the east and west coasts of the United tSates, he was placed in charge of weights and measurers from 1889 to 1893.

In 1890 he was sent to Paris to obtain for the United States the standard meter and to inspect weights and measuure offices in London, Paris and Berlin. Five years later he was American delegate to the International Geodetic Conference in Berlin. In 1900 he was appointed member of the Permanent Commission of the International Geodetic Association.

After serving as assistant in charge of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey Office from 1895 to 1899, Dr. Tittmann became assistant superintendent and then superintendent. When he retired in 1915 he had been attacched to the survey nearly half a century.

In the meanwhile, Dr. Tittmann represented the United States in settling the Alaska-Canada boundary and served as expert before the Alaska Boundary Tribunal in London in 1903. He was also a commissioner for the United States-Canada boundary from 1908 to 1915.

Dr. Tittmann was a fellow of the Philosophical Society of Washington, of which he was president in 1899. He was president of the Washington Academy of Sciences in 1913.

At one time, he was vice president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and was a member of the American Philosophical Society, American Meteorological Society and the American Society of Civil Engineers. He contributed to various scientific journals. Dr. Tittmann also was president of the Cosmos Club in 1904.

He held honorary degrees from George Washington University, Stevens Institute of Technology and Washington University, St. Louis.

In 1880, Dr. Tittmann married Miss Kate Trowbridge Wilkins, of Detroit, who died last year.

Franco

will never consent to the slightest mortgage of its soil or of its economic life."

The Earl of Plymouth, chairman of the nonintervention committee, is interrupting his vacation in South Wales, and will return to London tomorrow to consider Franco's reply, copies of which have also been sent to Prime Minister Chamberlain, resting at Chequers, and to Foreign Secretary Halifax, in Yorkshire.

Tone Considered Insolent.

In diplomatic circles tonight there was no attempt to put a good face on Franco's note, which was considered peremptory and almost insolent in tone. It was considered that a settlement of the Spanish question on which Chamberlain has set so much store was farther away than ever.

If the nonintervention committee decides there is any use in keeping itself alive, six months are expected to elapse before any sort of a compromise.

Another factor which makes the committee's task hopeless is the attitude of Soviet Russia, whose Ambassador in London, is understood to have told Lord Halifax that Moscow could not agree to further modifications or compromises on the scheme.

Franco's attitude also dashes Chamberlain's hopes for the "settlement in Spain" which would permit the Anglo-Italian agreement of last Easter to be brought into operation.

Is Cornerstone of Policy.

The agreement is the cornerstone of his foreign policy appeasement. He has pledged himself so firmly not to make the pact effective before the Spanish situation is cleared up, that he cannot back down without jeopardizing his domestic support and the position of his cabinet.

Fraco's reply also serves to ruin the already slender chances of an Italo-French acord along the lines of the Anglo-Italian agreement and as long as bad feeling persists between Rome and Paris there can be no settlement in Spain which would make Chamberlain's life more pleasant.

Ciano Answers Britain.

Rome, August 21.—Count Ciano, Italian Foreign Minister, has told Sir Noel Charles, British charge d'affaires, that Italy did not regard the dispatch of reinforcements to keep the present Italian forces in Spain up to strength as a violation of the nonintervention agreement, it was understood today.

Ciano's statement was in reply to British requests for an answer to reports of renewed Italian intervention in Spain. It was understood the British request for information covered even wider ground, such as this country's furnishing motorized equipment, air craft and aerial bombs to Gen. Franco, Spanish rebel chief, and a report that bombers over Spain were based directly at Italian airports.

The nature of the reply created a pessimistic impression in diplomatic circles here. It was considered to have done nothing to mitigate the strain on Anglo-Italian relations.

The improved atmosphere, following the signing of the Anglo-Italian agreement, which does not go into effect until there has been a settlement in Spain, is rapidly vanishing. Many observers believe that unless a decisive change soon takes place, Anglo-Italian relations soon will be back at the bitter pre-pact stage.

Hungary Regent, On Visit to Hitler, Hailed in Vienna

fond remembrance so far as it signified the fulfillment of the German task of this land and the welfare of the Hungarian nation."

An impressive figure, Horthy thanked Seyss-Inquart and then reviewed a military honor company to the strains of the Hungarian national anthem.

Wife to Christen Ship.

Following a short halt in Vienna the regent and his party headed north across Germany toward Kiel, whede Mme. Horthy tomorrow is to christen Nazi Germany's first 10,000-ton battleship. There Horthy will meet Reichsfuehrer Hitler, who will stage the Nazis' greatest naval show for his guest.

German newspapers declared Hungarian-German friendship "is based on common national interests as a result of faithful brotherhood in arms during the World War," when the Austro-Hungarian Empire fought with Imperial Germany.

Little Entente Offers Pact.

Bled, Yugoslavia, Aug. 21 (AP).—The foreign ministers of Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Rumania—the Little Entente—today offered Hungary armament equality, a nonaggression pact and increased Hungarian minority rights, on condition Hungary would sign an identical bilateral agreement with each of the three nations.

According to one Yugoslav diplomat, a Hungarian representative, called into the meeting, seemed pleased to sign such an agreement with Yugoslavia and Rumania, but declared that Hungary must demand an agreement with Czechoslovakia in which Hungarian minorities there would be granted whatever rights Sudeten Germans receive in negotiations now in progress in Prague.

France to Bar 40-Hour Week To Speed War Preparations

Daladier

of the world, inspired by the same passion for liberty as France."

Despite Daladier's eloquent appeal to the country to accept increased working hours on the grounds of patriotism, acceptance by French labor of his plea is highly uncertain, because workers regard as sacrosanct the 40-hour week—one of the social reforms achieved under former Premier Blum's People's Front government.

The premier has struck at a time when Leon Jouhaux, head of the French General Confederation of Labor, is on the high seas on his way to the United States. The plans of the cabinet to modify the highly criticized 40-hour week will strain to the utmost the cords that still link together the parties of the People's Front, founded three years ago, and may have far-reaching political consequences.

Another indication of the Government's determination to take a firm hand with regard to labor was its action tonight to put an end to the Marseilles dock workers' strike, which has lasted for more than a month.

Following the decision of the dock workers Friday to reject the government's compromise, Paul Ramadier, minister of labor, tonight handed representatives of both employers and workers a project establishing a special labor rule exclusively for Marseilles in the event the two sides fail to settle their dispute by tomorrow.

Troops Unload Ships.

It was understood the government's plan provided "industrial mobilization" of the dock workers. A ministerial decree will be issued declaring the port a public utility of vital national importance, and if the employers and workers fail to conform to the government's regulations, they will be hailed before a military tribunal instead of the civil courts.

A foretaste of the government's intention to put an end to the Marseilles strike, which has inflicted a great financial loss on France's chief Mediterranean port, was given today when authorities put Senegalese sharpshooters to loading and unloading ships calling at the city.

Painting a gloomy picture of the European situation to drive home to his fellow Frenchmen the necessity of increased production, Daladier said:

"Warlike conflicts and international differences dominate present-hour re-occupations of the nations. War rages in Spain and the Far East. In the center of Europe the great powers try out their armed forces. For their soldiers and reservists there is no longer any real limit to the duration of military service. For their workers there is no real limit to the hours of work. A majjorjijtjy of the countries of the world give an example of intense activity. These facts are a warning to France."

"Favoring Those Who Wish War."

Declaring again he did not believe in the inevitability of war, the Premier nevertheless continued:

"We can maintain peace only to the extent that we have the courage to avoid all financial crisis."

Not only would devaluation of the franc and exchange control break France's contacts with the United States and Great Britain, he warned, but, citing "the testimony of the most qualified observer," he said a French monetary crisis now would be "considered as a circumstance favoring those who wish war."

This was diplomatic language which all Frenchmen understood readily enough to mean that Reichsfuehrer Hitler would strike at Czechslovakia immediately if France became involved in one of her periodic financial crises.

"Our duty, therefore, is to escape a crisis which would be full of perils to France and peace," he said.

Technically, the franc is sound, he said, pointing out that it was backed by an immense gold reserve and defended by strong exchange equalization funds, while the cover of the nation's currency amounted to nearly 100 per cent.

Since last spring, he added, several billion francs in expatriated capital have flowed back into the country, while savings banks' deposits had increased, treasury notes and defense bonds had been quickly subscribed.

French and foreign markets doubt the solidity of the franc and the future of the currency, Daladier said, because "the national income of France has been constantly declining for several years, while charges on State and public bodies have been increasing."

The remedy, he insisted, was "an increase in the national income."

"We must put France back to work," he added.

While declaring for "a vigorous effort toward energetic reduction of budgetary expenses, he rejected former Premier Laval's policy of deflation, which, he said, had "given repeated proof of its impotence."

"We Must Work More."

"The 40-hour law must be modified by virtue of national necessity, as well as by reason of the general situation of Europe.

"As long as the international situation remains so delicate, we must work more than 40 hours—even up to 48 hours—in enterprises affecting the national defense. It is not a question of repealing the 40-hour law, but of permitting all firms which can work more to do so—the supplementary hours no longer being paid for according to the prohibitive tariff of today, but according to a reasonable increase, which can vary according to industries, but which must not exceed an average of 10 per cent."

Japan Captures Key Town on Lake Poyang

U. S.-Tokyo Tension Grows as Gunboat Is Held in Yangtze River.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai, Aug. 21.—Following up a withering air and naval bombardment, Japanese forces today captured the walled town of Singtze, Lake Poyang Port and a major obstacle in their drive on Nanchang, capital of Kiangsi Province.

Singtze is 18 miles below Kiukiang, a Yangtze River port captured by the invaders on July 25 and now the base for their drive on Hankow, provisional capital 135 miles upstream.

U. S.-Japanese Tension Increases.

[A few miles above Kiukiang in the Yangtze is the United States gunboat Monocacy, over which, according to the United Press, diplomatic tension is developing between Japan and the United States.

[The Japanese refuse to allow the American vessel to proceed down the river to Shanghai for needed supplies. Rear Admiral Yarnell, U. S. Asiatic Fleet commander, is said to have yielded only after the dispute was referred to Washington. American officials were reported, however, to be keeping the matter open, and diplomats saw possibility of the greatest strain on Japanese-American relations since the sinking of the Panay last December.—Editor's note.]

Teian, 30 miles south of Kiukiang, is expected to be the next Japanese objective.

Despite the Japanese victory, Chinese commanders reported severe fighting was continuing south of Kiukiang. They reported 3,000 Japanese had been killed since they started blasting toward Nanchang.

On the Yellow River front, Chinese acknowledged they were forced to withdraw from Puchow, taking up new positions behind the town, and admitted an entire battalion was wiped out.

Stray Bullet Kills Briton.

Chinese guerrillas continued sporadic raids along the Lunghai railway in Shantung Province, and attacked Japanese outposts of Suchow.

(Heavy machine-gun fire enveloping the entire western perimeter of Shanghai caused excitement among residents of that part of the city early today as Chinese guerrillas renewed attacks upon Japanese outposts. Results of the fighting were not divulged by official sources.)

A stray bullet killed Richard N Keys, 22, son of Maj. P. H. Keys, British architect, during a guerrilla attack on a Japanese outpost at Hungjao, Shanghai suburb. Young Keys was sleeping on the roof of his home when the guerrillas opened up an attack on the outpost, only 100 yards away.

[The Japanese Domei News Agency denied reports in London that Italy secretly is attempting to mediate the Chinese-Japanese war, the United Press said. Italians in Shanghai would not comment but many foreign observers believed the report correct.— Editor's note.]

Protected by League.

The Free City of Danzig, former German territory, was set up as a free territory under the protection of the League of Nations by the Treaty of Versailles. Danzig and Poland were made a single customs territory.

National Socialists became the only party in Parliament last October. Last month it was reported Albert Forster visited London to obtain British acquiescence to an autumn plebiscite by which the territory would be returned to Germany.

In March, when Poland enforced her demands on Lithuania for a settlement of their 18-year-old dispute, authoritative reports from Berlin said Germany had agreed to keep her hands off that affair if Poland would agree to Berlin's seizure of Danzig.

Leftists Seek French Arms For Loyalists

Daladier Supporters Urge Opening of Border as Franco 'Reprisal.'

By the United Press.

Paris, Aug. 21.—Premier Daladier's Popular Front supporters tonight demanded the Pyrenees frontier be thrown open immediately to arms shipments to the Spanish loyalists as a "reprisal" against Gen. Franco's opposition to the volunteers withdrawal plan.

Franco's answer to the London Non-Intervention Committee's plan was regarded as tantamount to a rejection.

The French Socialists and Communists, comprising two-thirds of Daladier's parliamentary majority, immediately asked the premier to reopen the border passes.

Heading the demand was the Socialist leader, Leon Blum, who when he was premier defined the policy later accepted by the 27 powers of the London committee.

Blum is convinced Franco is stalling for time because he and his supporters, Premier Mussolini and Reichs Fuehrer Hitler, realize the insurgents cannot strike a decisive blow for victory if Franco is deprived of his Italian and German artillery experts, tank drivers and aviation units.

Blum's Socialist newspaper, Le Populaire, said the decision of "sanctions' against the insurgents lies with France and Great Britain.

France closed the frontier completely June 13, not only to French arms shipments but to all arms shipments from Russia, Mexico, Czechoslovakia and other countries, as a gesture of good will which she hoped would speed acceptance of the London committee's proposals.

French Minister Halted in Climb Up Mont Blanc

Saint Gervais, France, Aug. 21 (AP). Mountaineer guides refused Minister of Education Jean Zay permission to climb through fog to a snow-covered refuge he was scheduled to open today 14,300 feet up the side of towering Mont Blanc.

An enthusiastic Alpinist, Zay set out with guides for the New Vallat refuge, but the mountaineers declined to let him go beyond 10,820 feet.

The ascent, from which two other cabinet members withdrew at the last moment, had been publicized as an attempt to prove that France's statesmen are as hardy as Italy's, whose ministers must demonstrate their athletic ability by leaping bayonet fences for Premier Mussolini.

supported by tanks and intense artillery fire.

Franco's headquarters asserted Insurgent guns, tanks, rifles and bayonets had taken a toll of more than 5,000 Loyalist lives in three days of struggle.

In today's fighting, according to the Insurgent version, more than 500 Loyalists were killed and 700 taken prisoners, bringing to 5,000 the number said to have been captured by Franco's forces in three days.

5 Convicts Wounded In Prison Camp Melee

Savannah, Ga., Aug. 21 (AP).—W. T. Summerlin, warden of Chatham County prison camps, said today five colored prisoners were wounded by guards and police in a near-riot at a camp located on the outskirts of Savannah.

Burying Leader, Slovaks Intensify Autonomy Pleas

Rosenberg, Czechoslovakia, Aug. 21 (U.P.).—The Slovak People's Party used a funeral today as a point of departure for a more radical autonomy program and closer ties with the Sudeten Germans.

More than 75,000 Slovaks buried their leader, Father Andreas Hlinka, and immediately afterward Slovak leaders expressed renewed demands of Czechoslovakia's 3,000,000 Slovaks for full autonomy.

Deputy Karel Sidor, generally accepted as Father Hlinka's successor, said the government's adamant attitude probably will drive the Slovaks into fuller collaboration with the Sudeten minority.

Prague, Aug. 21 (AP).—Cheers and Nazi salute greeted Viscount Runciman, British minorities mediator, today on a visit to Reichenberg, largest city in Czechoslovakia's autonomy-demanding Sudeten region.

The Time Capsule.

Whatever else can be said about this age of ours, it certainly shows a rather exquisite consideration for remote posterity. Indeed, there is something very touching about the desire of the Smithsonian Institution that the boys and girls of the seventieth century A. D. should have a good clear picture of our little epoch.

Nevertheless, we confess we have certain reservations about this curious time capsule that the Smithsonian is building with the help of the Westinghouse Electric Company. Among various presents to be wrapped up with good wishes for the seventieth century archaeologists, for instance, will be a specimen of the kind of hats worn by women in the autumn of 1938. Does this mean that the Smithsonian believes it will require 5,000 years to figure out the complex which makes such headgear tolerable? Gentlemen, that is rank defeatism, a craven admission of twentieth century incapacity! Instead of attempting to pass the buck in this shameful manner, let us manfully tackle this baffling problem for ourselves.

Another aspect of the plan about which we have misgivings is this streamlined Rosetta stone, a "key to English" that somebody has invented and which is to make it easy for the archaeologists who break into the time capsule to understand our language. Now we are all for doing the generous thing by the seventieth century, but just the same charity begins at home. And it seems quite fair to ask whether it would not be more reasonable to turn this wonderful gadget or tablet over to our high schools and colleges.

And this raises still another question: Suppose the seventieth century doesn't have to bother with this capsule? Suppose by that time the science of relativity is developed to the point where anybody who is curious about what might have happened in A. D. 1938 can just dial the proper light wave, as we now dial the proper sound wave for Samarkand or Pago Pago. As we think about it the whole scheme begins to remind us of a story by Max Beerbohm called "Eric Soames."

Eric was an author and almost insanely anxious to know how his work would be rated by posterity. Unable to think of any other way to learn he sold his soul to Satan who in return allowed him to visit the British Museum as of 3000 A. D. After searching vainly through book after book for some mention of himself, he came upon one which contained the following: "Soames, Eric: A fictitious character employed in a story by Max Beerbohm to show how seriously the young men of the 1890's were accustomed to take themselves."

Blackface Minstrelsy.

Discussions of what have been the distinctly American contributions to the arts generally confine themselves to functional architecture, dithyrambic verse, certain Indian dances, Negro spirituals, the Stephen Foster songs and, of course, jazz. It is to be hoped that the death just the other day of Tom Heath may serve to remind the highbrows of something they seem to have overlooked—blackface minstrelsy.

No one, perhaps, could track down the precise origins of this altogether native, and for three generations at least, flourishing genre. It was, of course, Edwin P. Christy who invented, or at any rate introduced, the minstrel ritual that is still followed, at church bazaars, lodge gatherings and high school entertainments. Likewise it was Christy who created that heirarchy of Mr. Interlocutor, Mr. Bones and Mr. Tamborine, who are certainly entitled to as much immortality as Punch and Judy or Pierrot and Pantaloon.

But long before the day of Christy's Virginia Minstrels a little boy of five or six, his face smeared with carbonized cork, was being emptied out of a sack on the stages of theaters all over the country. His name was Joseph Jefferson, but he was billed as

". . . this little darky here
That jumps Jim Crow."

Before that there was a real Jim Crow whose blackface would not wash off. And long after Christy blackface minstrelsy underwent further development and mutation in such hands as Lew Dockstader's, Frank Dumont's, Vic Richard's, Bert Williams' and of course the famous McIntyre and Heath.

Minstrelsy, indeed, was the parent of most of the distinctly American contributions to music and the theater. Out of Christy's minstrels came the medicine show. To another minstrel troupe the South owes its "Dixieland." Nor should it be forgotten that the Foster ballads were first sung in public by Christy himself. From Bert Williams, one of the greatest of them all, stems a distinct school of comedy. And nobody could convince Tom Heath that the first ragtime song, from which has sprouted the whole cultus of jazz and swing, was not the "Cinnamon Gal" that he and Jim Heath made so famous in the days just after the Civil War.

Revising The Labor Act.

Revision of the national labor relations act will doubtless be one of the important tasks of the new Congress which will assemble in January. During the last session a movement for re-examination of the act gained considerable headway. More recently the American Federation of Labor has taken a definite stand for restriction of the NLRB's powers. If President Roosevelt also favors some changes as reported by William Green, president of the A. F. of L., there can be little doubt that the entire subject of employer-employe relations will be reviewed on Captol Hill.

The President's attitude has probably been influenced more by the findings of the industrial relations committee he sent to Great Britain and Sweden than by his conference with Mr. Green. The report of this group is now being prepared. It may become the basis of legislative proposals from the White House. In any event, it will give the President and Congress an opportunity to measure the results of the labor relations act against the experience of other countries where collective bargaining is more thoroughly established than in the United States.

Even if the national labor relations act had been fully satisfactory when first enacted, there would be strong arguments now for its amendment. Since that law was drafted the labor movement in this country has split into hostile camps. The discretion given the board to designate the proper unit for collective bargaining purposes has become a tremendous power to favor either one of these groups at the expense of the other. Could this fact have been foreseen the powers granted the NLRB might have been far more carefully circumscribed.

Complaints from the A. F. of L. that the authority of the board has been abused seem to have brought the issue of revising the act to a head. But these only supplement long-standing criticism from employers and many independent students of labor relations. For the act is definitely one-sided. It imposes a code of fair practices upon employers without any comparable restrictions upon organized labor groups. It bestows upon labor unions rights which they certainly ought to have. But it fails to require of them a degree of responsible conduct essential for orderly collective bargaining.

Organized labor as well as industry would doubtless profit from a judicious overhauling of these provisions. The objective to be sought is a smooth working relationship between employers and employes represented by negotiators of their own choice. An act which unnecessarily tends to arouse bitter antagonism among employers is not conducive to that end. Orderly collective bargaining might have made much greater progress during the last few years if newly organized unions had been guided by codes of fair practice comparable to those imposed upon employers.

It will not be an easy task to revise the act so that all the progress toward genuine collective bargaining can be preserved and the abuses of arbitrary action eliminated. The continued antagonism between the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. presents a dilemma that will not be easily overcome. But the interests of better industrial relations in a difficult recovery period definitely call for re-examination of the labor relations act as part of the Administration's next legislative program.

$30 Every Thursday.

There is something about California that makes it an astonishingly rich culture medium for even the most fantastic ideas and movements. Maybe it's the climate. Maybe it's the presence within its borders of Hollywood. Whatever the cause, the fact is indisputable that no other part of the Nation is as alive with far-flung plans of national regeneration as is the Golden State.

It is some years since the "good grey doctor" first burst upon public consciousness with his plan for $200-a-month pensions for all over 60. He and his movement are now in eclipse. But others have reaped the fields he first plowed and have found the harvest good. Some sixteen other old-age plans have bobbed up in California during the past five years. And the one that has greatest popular acceptance at the present time has the support of no fewer than 789,104 Californians. At least that many signed petitions calling for a vote on the proposal that $30 be handed out every Thursday to all over 50.

Although the sum is more modest than the pensions favored by Dr. Townsend, the age limit is a decade lower. Apparently that is one reason for the popularity of this newest plan. So it may not be long before there will be a movement to provide pensions for 40-year-olds as well. Certainly such a movement would give added employment to organizers, speakers, printers, owners of halls, and others who have managed to make a good living out of other people's dreams of an easy old age.

And if 40 why not 30? And if 30 why not 20 or 10 or 5? Maybe everybody ought to be pensioned at birth, thus solving, at one stroke, and for all concerned the unpleasant problem of making a living. California, here we come!

Zoning Washington.

Two new zoning agencies have just been appointed by the Commissioners. One, the Zoning Advisory Council, is a mere official designation for a group which for several years has been serving as an informal liaison agent between the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the local Zoning Commission. The other is the new Board of Zoning Adjustment.

The adjustment board is to be a creature of the Zoning Commission. It will have no authority to amend a regulation or map; it cannot receive appeals from the rulings of the Zoning Commission. Its function will be merely to interpret the maps and pass on questions arising in the administration of the regulations. To date, the commission itself has dispatched these duties with a success reflected in the fact that no single exemption granted by it has been disputed in the courts. However, in so acting, the commission has performed legislative and judicial as well as executive functions. To end this undesirable concentration of power the separate adjustment board was needed.

In effect, the new board marks the first important step toward the long awaited modernization of the District's zoning machinery. Although a pioneer in the field when adopted in 1920, the local zoning code has not kept pace with the times. True, in 1924 decisions of several State courts inspired a change to permit subdivision of general classifications so that, for instance, multiple dwellings could be allowed in certain residential areas and forbidden in others. But, by and large, the code has remained in its original stiff form. Legislation approved by Congress at the last session now permits a new flexibility in accord with the standard zoning act recommended for States by the Department of Commerce.

The zoning problems of Washington are several and serious. As the Capital was zoned in 1920, enough downtown space was marked for commercial development to satisfy a city of several million. The result has been that many downtown property owners, hopefully anticipating the high prices commercial building generally commands, have allowed their old residences to deteriorate. All but low-income tenants have naturally moved away. In the main, they have gone to the outskirts of the city.

Here at least they should have found complete zoning protection. But they did not. The old code permits regulation of height, area and use of buildings. Not until the new law was passed, however, did it become possible to control population density.

To guide the commission in establishing the optimum number of families to be allowed on a given area, a WPA survey is soon to begin. On the basis of its findings a formula will be worked out to encourage the more orderly development of Washington's residential areas. But this alone can not solve the whole problem any more than the new and tighter regulation of non-conforming buildings can solve the city's downtown dilemma.

Washington's entire zoning system needs to be carefully analyzed and a considerable part of it to be overhauled. That is a tremendous responsibility. Fortunately the law is now sufficiently flexible to permit desirable changes. It remains for the experts to whom this task has been assigned to assure the orderly growth of each section of the city on the basis of realism too often lacking in previous zoning efforts.

"As When In Milks—"

Miss Flora McFlimsey of Madison Square who complained in the ballad she'd nothing to wear may now take heart. The cow that jumped over the moon has good news for her.

Or, if it isn't the cow that jumped over the moon, anyhow it is a cow that science has made equally glamorous and remarkable. In plain words and sober sooth Stephen Quoid and Earl Whittier of the Department of Agriculture have developed a process of making synthetic wool from the casein in milk.

But it's a little hard, perhaps, on Miss Muffett. Agriculture's bright young men have used up the curds and left only the whey.

This goes to show that even good news has some drawbacks. It isn't, as it were, the pure cream. Moreover, this discovery may have economic repercussions. What will happen to the regular wool industry?

It is all very well to say that Mary's new dress is strictly the cheese, but what about Mary's little lamb? Alas, poor Mary's lamb is on a dusty shelf where it may sadly wag its tail and spank its little self.

Canadian Opinion.

From the London (Ont.) Free Press.

At the present time the national debt of the United States is over $37,000,000,000. Canada is in a bad enough position with our national debt, and we have no right to throw stones, but at least most of the provincial governments and the federal administration are making a serious effort to balance their budgets and are coming appreciably near. But the American Government is gaily going ahead piling up deficits of a fantastic figure. Try and count up to a billion if you want to find out the size of the American balance in red.

Some Adjustment Should Be Made.

The Merit System.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With characteristic fairness and analogy, The Post in its editorial expression of August 18, takes defense of the new order of things regarding the merit system. As stated, the fate of the executive order's efficiency rests in the hands of managers.

With the order scarcely a month old, one agency sets up a group of governors in which are to be found an economist, a biologist, a forester, a pathologist, a financial officer, and a newspaper reporter—and yet the fundamental order set forth that administrators should be equipped essentially in personnel administration. Again, the Civil Service Commission has set the top entrance salary for the personnel directors at $8,500 and yet an instance exists where a director, who has not qualified by specific examination, receives at present $7,500 per annum.

In time, of course, these inequities may be squared and the press, by its consistent militancy for the merit system in government, be recognized as a leader in a great cause.

Second March.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The first march through Georgia left burning houses and cities, homeless refugees, farms destroyed, all food and other supplies confiscated; read the pages of any history and learn the universal destruction.

The second march through Georgia has left the Techwood Apartments in the place of slums, the restoration of the Cyclorama at Grant Park, thousands of miles of new highways, acres rescued from soil erosion, electricity brought to the remotest farmhouses, beautiful buildings for the University of Georgia, new schoolhouses, courthouses and hospitals, food for the hungry, clothing for the needy, jobs for the unemployed, better prices for the farmer, blessings and benefits on every hand.

Thanks Just The Same.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The President's very flowery speech in Canada, saying the United States would fight and protect Canada, if it was ever attacked by a foreign enemy is very nice indeed. But Canada has no enemies, as yet. Besides, it belongs to the British Empire. While they have independent government, like most of England's Dominions and possessions, nevertheless, if there is any protecting to do, England is quite capable with Canada's help of protecting its own belongings. It is obvious from all indications and rumors during the past year, that the United States is afraid of enemies. But let us hope that the enemies of the U. S. A. will not get Canada mixed up in their troubles. A CANADIAN.

North Hemispherean.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Having read President Roosevelt's heart-warming address at Kingston today, I venture to opine that we are no longer two races but one. There no longer is a 5,500-mile border. The border now is nonexistent. We are all united as one great people under President Roosevelt and Mr. King.

I say we are now North Hemispheareans, "all for one and one for all;" united as never before.

Let it be shouted from the housetops, the mountain tops, aye, from the air lanes that there are no longer Americans or Canadians, but instead a far greater people than either, strong in the conviction that we shall always be on the side of right and mighty in our unity.

Southern Pride?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Years ago—I don't remember hearing of it lately—there was a frequently mentioned things called "Southern pride." I am wondering what has become of it; if it is still in existence or if it has gone where the woodbine twineth?

The last time I saw any evidence of it was when Madame Perkins (or whatever is the right name for the Secretaryess of Labor) accused almost the entire population south of the Mason and Dixon line of going barefoot. The people in the South then arose on their (bare) hindfeet and rebel yelled resentment.

But of late, with the President telling them whom they should send to represent him in Congress, and with the entire South being branded as a half-witted problem child, without any resultant evidences of active resentment or screams of outraged sensibilities, I have been wondering. And if Georgia doesn't resoundingly re-elect Senator George just to show she has entrails, I'll give up, and start raising a fund to erect a monument to be inscribed "Here lies Southern Pride. Requiescat (with the accent on the Scat) in Pace." People of Jefferson Davis' or Robert E. Lee's day are probably turning over rapidly in their coffins as they observe the humiliation to which the South is meekly submitting while being labeled ne'er-do-well and a mendicant.

Postman's Protest.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The evening papers last night and The Post this morning carried as front page news the fact "compassionate Government officials" because of the sizzling heat "sent the employes home." There is one department that didn't. The Postoffice officials.

If the mail is a little lighter than usual, there is no compassion in the hearts of these hard-boiled officials, seeking a little vainglory for an economy record. The mail carriers, after delivering their own routes—loaded as pack-horses—up and down steps through the intense heat of the day—are required (when mail is a little light) to carry out and deliver a second route, thus releasing without pay the subs, who work for regular carriers on their days off. This works a hardship on the subs who are most of them men with families, and in this almost unbearable heat, this practice imposes unnecessary discomfort on the regular carriers. Carriers are not looking for "compassionate" superiors but they would like justice. Only public opinion will ever remedy existing conditions in the Postoffice.

WORN OUT CARRIER.
Washington, Aug. 18.

Mr. Hart Stands Corrected.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Upon returning from a vacation I found on my desk a clipping from The Post of August 6, in which Mr. Scott Hart in his Federal Diary column says:

Charlie Hamilton, Washington's oldest newspaper correspondent . . . has a press card to the Senate gallery which was issued and signed by President Grover Cleveland . . .

Mr. Hart further states that he, Hamilton, "is now corresponding for the Buffalo paper which sent him to Washington 50 years ago . . ."

Mr. Hart is slightly inaccurate in these two statements. Grover Cleveland did not become President until three years after that gallery card was issued and, incidentally, the President has nothing whatever to do with the issuance of cards to the press gallery.

Again, the paper which sent him, Mr. Hamilton, to Washington went out of existence more than 25 years ago. Outside of that, the article is accurate. C. A. HAMILTON.

Age Pensions And Unemployment.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial in The Post on August 19, "A Basic Conflict of Policy," is quite interesting and your position is in accordance with facts. In comment, may a further consideration of basic conflict be suggested.

On November 9, at Grant Field, Atlanta, Ga., President Roosevelt is reported to have said:

National surveys prove that the average of our citizenship lives today on what would be called by the medical fraternity, a third-class diet.

If the country lived on a second-class diet, we would need to put many more acres than we use today into the production of foodstuffs for domestic consumption. If the Nation lived on a first-class diet we would have to put more acres than we have ever cultivated into the production of an additional supply of things for Americans to eat.

Why, speaking in broad terms in following up this particular illustration, are we living on a third-class diet? For the very simple reason that the masses of the American people have not the purchasing power to eat more and better food.

In your editorial you state: Secretary Wallace has concluded that surplus wheat cannot be sold abroad, etc., etc. After all, should not our first concern be to feed the American people? Our President asserts that if this were done we would "need to put more acres than we have ever cultivated into the production of an additional supply of things for Americans to eat." Yet the Secretary of Agriculture is puzzling his brain trying to limit the production of wheat. Surely this is a direful and disastrous conflict of those whose duty it is to secure the welfare of the people—the greatest good to the greatest number.

Your paper carried another excellent editorial in the issue of August 2 under the caption, "Financing Old Age Securities." In that editorial one might find a solution to many of the problems now facing us and eliminate the conflicts of policies. A Federal old-age pension, on a pay-as-you-go basis, would produce a pemanent purchasing power in the hands of those who would be least likely to misuse or abuse it. It would distribute that purchasing power universally, for these old folks are to be found from the shadow of the Capitol dome to the most remote postoffice in the Nation.

There are practically 8,000,000 of these old folks. It is estimated that 4,000,000 of them are employed. If the 4,000,000 now employed, after the years of actual productivity is past, would accept a Federal pension it would immediately make room for 4,000,000 of the unemployed. This would reduce the army of unemployed by practically one-third. The others would soon find employment in the production of those thing necessary to the welfare and comfort of the millions into whose hands the purchasing power would have been placed.

The Southern statesman who asserted that the North was able to recuperate more rapidly than the South, due to the fact that pensions were paid the Federal soldiers, stated more than a fact—he shows us the way out.

One hundred and two members of the last Congress realized this fact when they gave their support to the general welfare act, H. R. 4199. This bill was called to the attention of President Roosevelt the day after his radio address advocating the extension of the benefits of the social securities act, and the need of securing more revenues. The enactment into law of this measure will go farther toward eliminating the conflicts in policies and toward putting all our people on the first-class diet mentioned by our President, than any other measure up for consideration.

The Springhouse.

NIGHT had fallen but the Botts farm in Victory Gap still gasped in the heat. No air stirred, and the unpainted pine boards of the porch were hot to the touch. Even the moon, just past the full, and shaped like a bent pie-plate, sagged crookedly in a febrile sky. The summer boarders, money crop of the Botts Farm, lounged wearily, stuffed with fried steak and "cawn pone."

"To think that we might be in town tonight on the Mayfield Terrace, moaned the Frivolous Blonde.

The Ornithologist continued his monologue on "Birds of the Andes," but no one was listening.

Then a yell rent the hot air!

Aunt Majolica, visiting with the boarders in the true spirit of democracy, was so startled that she sat on the hound, who loped away in disgust. Uncle Clem was sprinting up the lane from the springhouse, as if the Arch-fiend were at his heels. Aunt Majolica was used to her husband's eccentricities, but she had never seen him hurry.

"You old coot," she shouted. "What do you mean, yelling like that?"

"There's a fairy down to the springhouse," Clem panted weakly.

"I knew you'd had one drink too many of that stuff," said Majolica.

* * * *

The springhouse had long been a bone of contention between this happy pair. Its cool waters were useful for pans of milk and cheese, and Irma (a right peart shoat) basked against the wall. But it was also useful for Clem's array of jugs, and he sometimes allowed favored guests to use it for their own beverages, a practice bitterly frowned upon by Majolica. Hot words had passed on the subject from time to time.

"Drink nuthin. By the Green Pastures, there's sunthin in the springhouse, and if it ain't a fairy, you tell me what it is?"

"Just because your Paw took stock in that old yarn about the Fairy Woman, you ain't got no call to lose your senses, sech as they be," said Majolica.

Clem's face was beet-red; his stringy hair stood up with fright; one gallus was busted. You could tell he was really scared, and you could have heard him breathe all the way down to Tunket Village.

"What did you see," demanded the boarders, dragging themselves from their lethargy.

"Sunthin white. It dances and it sings," Clem said, eyes rolling.

"I heard sech a tale about this farm once,' said the poorhouse girl. "Nobody wanted to work here for a spell."

"Shet up!" said Majollica.

"Probably a psychic phenomenon," ventured the blonde.

"I just knew these mountains must be full of folk-lore," gurgled the author, who had a scent for romance like Bugle Annie (the hound), only more up to date, of course.

* * * *

Flashlights were produced and all hands started down the lane. The stone springhouse did look rather spooky, there in the moonlight shaded by a weeping willow, enough so to make the Fairy Woman feel at home. The author could picture her with golden hair and green eyes. The moon looked plumb queer, red and lop-sided. The mountain was a lonely place and down the road you could see Vinegar Run shining eerily. A voice was singing inside the springhouse—no, not exactly singing, but sort of moaning. The boarders drew closer together!

Clem threw open the door, upsetting a pan of milk. Someone threw a beam of light inside. A white creature was dancing within. It uttered strange cries! Its green eyes sparkled! The author fainted. Everyone else yelled. But trust science in a pinch! First to pull himself together was the ornithologist.

"A white owl, by crickey! he exclaimed.

* * * *

It was indeed an enormous white owl, the like of which had not been seen in the mountain for 20 years. Not only that, but it was a very badly boiled owl! Some of Clem's moonshine had slipped out of a jug into the holes of the worn stone floor. The owl had been making a bender of it. It flopped and uttered strange cries. In fact, quite as Clem had said, it danced and it sang.

* * * *

Only the ornithologist seemed happy. He clutched in his arms a large, feathery white creature which still emitted from time to time a weak "awk!"

"A very interesting specimen," the ornithologist stated proudly. "I shall either present it to the zoo or possibly I shall stuff it!"

"Stuff!" snorted Aunt Majolica.

Read 'Em And Weep.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Senator Sherman Minton, of Indiana, tells the American Press Society "that it should be a crime to publish as a fact anything known to be false." The Congressional Record, published at the public expense ostensibly to inform the public, habitually publishes as facts things known to be false. The Congressional Record publishes as part of the proceedings of Congress "speeches" and "remarks" that have never been delivered and will never be delivered. The Congressional Record, with Senator Minton's consent and encouragement, lies "knowing it to be a lie"—that's his language about the newspapers of America. Fair Enough

Horse Track Morality.

THE high-minded antics of the horse-track people in their moments of big morality always suggest the indignation of the old-time burlesque queen when the comic in the two-passenger pants called her "chicken."

Don Meade, a jockey who once rode a winner in the Kentucky Derby, has been reinstated for duty on the Florida tracks after a long suspension on the basis of information which was obtained by wiretapping as he communicated with his bookmaker. A jockey would not be punished for betting on his own mounts or on races in which he was not riding. But, even assuming that he bet against his own horse and that he lost his race to win his wager, Mr. Meade would establish no marked moral inferiority to many of those who have the honor of the game in their keeping.

• • • •

MR. MEADE was riding by authority of a law which was shush-funded through a cheap Florida Legislature after racing had existed for years, somewhat uncertainly, by local bribery. He knew, if he had been at all observant, that no tests of character or honor are assumed by those who operate race tracks, and that racketeers of the prohibition period have been among those in the business. He doubtless had seen horses owned by underworld characters running in the colors of dummy stables, and he must have seen some of the most august guarantors of the racing industry sweating over the gambling tables in the evening in joints operated by criminals. In short, Mr. Meade would have been justified in hoping that a little job of larceny would be interpreted as the sincerest flattery of many of the influential elders of the game. Thus it must have shocked the boy to hear that he was suspended that time, the more so when it came out that his phone had been tapped, an offense itself no less criminal than that of pulling a horse into one's lap.

• • • •

RACING is such a bizarre mixture of fancy manners, high pretense, bribery and lop-eared racketeering that, far from affecting a righteous frown at the discovery of a little funny business, the governors should whoop with proud surprise whenever they discover evidence tending to show that a race has been run on the level. Theirs is a sport which lives by permission of cash-and-carry political bosses and State legislators and buys its life from day to day by graft in the form of jobs thrown to ward and precinct workers and lump contributions to campaign funds. It is, in the main, a gambling concession of which the horses and the little jockeys who stride them are only the gadgets.

The motive is percentage, and the same effect could be observed if the same Legislatures should issue a similar number of exclusive licenses to the same operators to conduct gigantic roulette wheels, seven or eight whirls a day. It stimulates the circulation of money by spending as well as by gambling, provides a large number of jobs and does no harm worth considering. But it is not a noble institution, and its occasional blurts of indignation and wrath against the more clumsy offenders only emphasize the paltriness of their nickel and dime swindles by comparison with the major coups of some of the distinguished leaders, including financiers.

IT HAS always been my sordid contention that the public, even including the bettors, is no worse off for a fake, and no better off for an honest race, because fakery should be reckoned as one of the possibilities. Ed Bradley once told me that there were 18 or 57, or some such number, factors that could intervene to beat the best horse in any field. The horse could be kicked, left, pocketed or fouled in a number of ways; he could jump the fence, fall, lose his boy or drop dead, to mention a few of the hazards. It seems stingy and insincere not to add fakery to such an abundant list of possibilities.

And if a horse be pulled by the jockey and another, and quite unworthy, horse win the race, that merely means that certain other persons profit and rejoice instead of those no more worthy individuals who beat a favorite. This, however, is just a mischievous and, perhaps, a mighty immoral thought of one individual which has nothing to do with the fact that the least of the moral offenses of racing occur on the track and in the barns. Those who tapped Mr. Meade's telephone, for example, or bribed public officials, probably did not even give a thought to the possibility that there could be something criminal in that.

U. S. and State Funds to Start Huge Maryland U. Rebuilding

$1,200,000 Worth of Additions and New Projects to Be Begun After Labor Day; Baltimore Medical School, Princess Anne Also Aided.

Construction will start on the largest building program in history of the University of Maryland immediately after Labor Day.

The campus at College Park will be entirely changed by the erection of eight new buildings or additions to present structures. Approximately $1,200,000 of the $2,500,000 supplied by the PWA and State Legislature will be spent there.

The medical, dental and pharmacy schools in Baltimore will be enlarged and modernized at a cost of $900,000. The academy for colored at Princess Anne will be rehoused in new buildings costing $220,000.

The flood of new construction follows a program in which more than $2,000,000 has been spent in the past four years, which is likely to put President H. C. Byrd down in annals of the university as a genius at geting money from State and Federal governments.

Bids will be opened next week for an addition to the infirmary at College Park, and a new medical school building in Baltimore, first buildings under construction. The others will follow before January 1.

The new construction is badly needed, school officials said yesterday. While increasingly stiffer entrance requirements have kept enrollment constant in recent years, registration at College Park has trebled from 900 to 2,700 in the last 10 years.

The center of the campus will be shifted several hundred yards to the north as the result of the new program and construction planned for the future. The area in front of the present administration building and library will be changed from the center of the campus to a new rectangle.

Another new rectangle will be formed bordered by the enlarged dining hall, engineering group, infirmary and Morrill Hall.

For the change the county road which runs behind the present agriculture and chemistry buildings will be relocated to connect with the Washington-Baltimore highway north of the present junction.

These buildings will form the southern boundary of the new campus. Northern boundary will be the arts and sciences, horticulture and new poultry buildings. The western boundary will be the proposed memorial library and the eastern will be the proposed auditorium.

Construction at College Park will include:

A new 40-room administration building, to cost approximately $300,000. Offices for administrative officials will be on the first and second floors. Publications will be on the third.

A new dormitory, to cost $137,000 and accommodate 200 men.

A new 19-room poultry building, which will house a cold storage plant for experiments, a refrigeration plant, hatchery and incubation rooms. When completed it is expected to be the most complete laboratory for poultry studies.

A new $108,000 24-room home economics building for class rooms and offices. Space will be provided for special studies in nutrition and the effect of refrigeration on food.

Two wings to the chemistry building for organic chemistry laboratories, cost yet undetermined.

A $208,000 addition to the engineering building. Plans are for the 34 class rooms and offices to be used for engineering courses in the arts and sciences college. In the future it is contemplated that activities in the arts and sciences and engineering buildings will be exchanged.

A $100,000 addition to the dining hall, which will increase capacity from 45 to 1,000.

A $28,000 addition to the infirmary which will add 12 beds for men and 12 for women. Four new isolation rooms, a dietitian's kitchen, and receiving and examination room will also be included. This will give the infirmary a total of 42 beds.

Other construction there calls for six greenhouses for botany, horticulture and zoology work costing $37,000; a general service building costing $47,000, and remodeling of the dairy building to cost $14,000.

Already under way at College Park is a WPA project restoring the Rossbourg Inn, which was built in 1798. The restoration, authentic in every detail, will be used as an alumni and faculty clubhouse when completed. Cost will be about $30,000.

The new medical school building at Baltimore will cost $490,000, complete with most modern laboratories.

The construction will also include a $70,000 addition to the nurses' home, and a $90,000 addition to the dental and pharmacy schools.

Contemplated but not yet approved is a $240,000 addition to the hospital in Baltimore.

The Negro academy at Princess Anne will get a $44,000 mechanics and arts building; an $86,000 administration and home economics building, and an $86,000 gymnasium and recreation building.

Nazi Finance Chief Attacks 'Dollar Politics'

Funk Declares Germany's Barter System Is Best for Trade.

By the Associated Press.

Koenigsberg, Germany, Aug. 21.—Germany's minister of economics, Walther Funk, today launched an attack against "dollar politics" in a speech defending the Nazi German system of barter agreements in foreign trade.

The government official failed to mention any nation specifically in his attack, but declared "dollar politics" was a weapon used to fight German economic influence abroad.

The Nazis "are striving with all their strength to build bridges across to foreign countries through our foreign commercial policy because we know we do not live alone and cannot live alone in the world," Funk said.

Funk asserted the barter system's results were an answer to Secretary of State Hull's implied criticism of the system on the ground that such agreements lead to decrease rather than increase of foreign trade.

[In a radio speech August 16 Secretary Hull deplored "economic nationalism," which he said throttled international trade and resulted in "tactics of the mailed fist."]

Funk described the German system as exchanging foreign countries' raw products for Germany's manufactured goods on a basis of "stable price and guaranteed volume."

"German commercial policy has been successful all along the line. Therefore, we are determined to continue along the route which necessity has pointed out because we see this is the only possible potentially successful way for Germany.

"We constantly see more clearly that this method is leading to a new system of world trade which no longer is founded on international dependencies, but on national economic energies—a system which safe guards and strengthens the national economic life, the foundations of the nation's material existence, thereby guaranteeing a healthy, stable exchange of goods in world trade."

The Idaho Primary

By Ernest Lindley

Some Significant Realignments.

THE ENTRY of Senator James P. Pope, into the Idaho senatorial contest is required by both the logic and the practical politics of the efforts of President Roosevelt and his supporters to create an alignment based on broad principles.

Superficial adherence to the customs of party politics would call for Senator Pope's graceful retirement, since he was defeated in the Democratic senatorial primary. But the victor, Representative D. Worth Clark, is an anti-New Deal Democrat, and the Republican senatorial nominee is also a conservative. As a result, the supporters of Mr. Roosevelt's policies are unrepresented in the senatorial election.

A kind of partial disenfranchisement of minorities is one of the necessary by-products of the party system—unless there are so many parties that effective government becomes almost impossible to achieve. Few voters on election day find that their choice is between a candidate completely to their liking and a candidate of whom they completely disapprove. Many New Dealers have misgivings about Senator Pope because of his strong internationalist tendencies. If the dominant political issue related to foreign policy—as may prove to be the case very shortly—some of them might prefer a conservative isolationist, such as Mr. Clark, to a progressive internationalist, such as Senator Pope. But the dominant issues now relate to domestic policy. The 1938 election is, or should be, a vote for or against the New Deal program. As matters now stand, the Idaho voters have no way of expressing their opinion in the senatorial election on the broad basic political question of the day.

• • • •

MR. ROOSEVELT carried Idaho in 1936 by almost 2 to 1. Allowing for the votes he received from conservative Democrats, for some shrinkage in the popularity of his program since 1936, and for all other factors, his supporters believe that he could carry Idaho by a handsome margin today. There is special reason why they do not regard Senator Pope's defeat in the primary as proof that Mr. Roosevelt's program no longer enjoys the confidence of even a majority of the members of his own party in Idaho. It is pretty clear that Senator Pope was beaten in the primary by Republican votes.

Under the new Idaho primary law, there is a single ballot for all parties. Senator Pope lost by about 3,000 votes. In one normally Republican county, 3,746 votes cast were in the Democratic senatorial primary, as compared with 1,124 in the Republican senatorial primary. Although there is no way of ascertaining the exact number, the Roosevelt Democrats estimate that between 10,000 and 20,000 Republicans voted for Mr. Clark.

Senator Pope can re-enter the senatorial contest either as an independent or as the nominee of the National Progressive Party, which has just been organized in Idaho. The immediate practical advantage of the latter alternative is that his name would appear on the ballot. Some of Mr. Roosevelt's lieutenants would prefer this alternative also because it would be a hint that if Mr. Roosevelt fails in his efforts to convert the Democratic Party organization into an instrument of progressive government, he might turn to a third party in 1940.

• • • •

WHEN THE National Progressive Party was launched last spring by the La Follettes, it was widely heralded in the anti-Roosevelt press as a threat to the New Deal. The La Follettes, looking ahead, are proceeding on the assumption that Mr. Roosevelt will not succeed in making the Democratic Party a Progressive Democratic Party. Mr. Roosevelt believes that the Democratic party can be made into an instrument of effective government. But at this stage it is helpful to him to have handy the nucleus of a third-party organization in various States.

The tactical use to which a third party may be put is illustrated in the Sixteenth Congressional District of New York, where the Roosevelt Democrats are trying to defeat Representative John J. O'Connor, chairman of the House Rules Committee. Their candidate, James H. Fay, has been designated by the American Labor Party, so that if he is beaten in the Democratic primary by Mr. O'Connor, he can remain in the race as the New Deal candidate. Mr. O'Connor tried to fortify himself by going after the Republican as well as the Democratic nomination. But the Republicans probably have blocked him by putting forth a high-grade candidate of their own, Allen W. Dulles.

The designation of Mr. Fay on the American Labor Party ticket in a New York Congressional district and the plans to keep Senator Pope in the Idaho senatorial race may foreshadow the tactics of the Roosevelt Democrats on a much more important front: the nomination of a Democratic candidate for Governor of New York. The New Dealers may have difficulty in bringing about the nomination of a progressive Democrat. They will have less difficulty if a practical alternative is available.

One such alternative would be to join hands with Mayor LaGuardia in supporting a candidate on the American Labor Party ticket. It is not generally known that in 1932, when Tammany and its allies were trying to prevent the nomination of Herbert H. Lehman for Governor, Mr. Roosevelt was ready to back Mr. Lehman as an independent candidate. That was before the American Labor Party had been organized.

• • • •

INCIDENTALLY, but importantly, the Idaho and New York tests may also provide a test of the present relationship between the President and James A. Farley. Mr. Farley already has congratulated Mr. Clark on his primary victory and offered him the assistance of the Democratic National Committee. If, after hearing from Hyde Park, he withdraws his support of Mr. Clark and gets behind Senator Pope, the significance will be plain to the conservative Democrats who have been counting on an open split between the President and his national chairman.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Summer Complaint.

(During the trial of Tammany leader, Jimmy Hines, in New York.)

I ought to be thinking of travel
And little but summertime fun;
With August so rapidly passing
All heavier stuff I should shun,
But all I can think of is "Pompez,"
Of "Horseface" and "Dixie" and such—
The "Weinbergs," the "Girsches" and "Brunders,"
The "Harrys," the "Sols" and of "Dutch."

II

My reading I'd have light and airy—
The weather, the moon and the tide—
The summer's the time to give fancy
Free swing, as it sails high and wide;
But all that I read of is "Schoenhaus,"
Of "Landau" and fellows called "Bo"—
With every third line an "Objection!"
Or "Answer me, please, yes or no!"

III

I ought to be thinking of music—
The season's the season for song;
The news should be all of regattas
And swimming events, columns long;
But all the headlines shriek of "Dixie"
And "numbers" and "payoffs" and "slips,"
Of "Lulu" and "Solly" and "Dabba,"
Of bribes and of fixes and tips!

IV

The time should be one of gay doings,
With stories as light as the air,
But all that I hear is "Exception!"
And "Now you can go on from there!" . . .
"Irrelevant!" . . . "No leading questions!" . . .
"And after that, what did he say?" . . .
"You'll just have to reframe that question" . . .
"You can't guide the witness that way!"

V

My paper should take but a moment
To read (and to read through and through)—
But after page one and page seven
With pictures of Jimmy attentive,
And photos of Jimmy when not,
And snapshots of Jimmy arriving
And also a home-going shot.

VI

Of Stryker and Dewey and "Dixie,"
Side view, from above, fore and aft,
Of crowds surging outside the courthouse,
Their faces a little bit daft;
With columns of quizzing verbatim . . .
"The question's improper, indeed!"
"I'll see your objection is noted" . . .
"We'll come to that later" . . .
"Proceed!"

L'Envoi.

Oh, take me far, far to the mountains
Or off to the beaches somewhere
Where nobody bellows "Objection" . . .
"I claim it" . . . "The question's unfair!"
Some place where there's no one named Jimmy——
Where no "Abadabbas" are known——
Where no one is talking of numbers;
If I want the news I will phone!

CAN YOU REMEMBER.

Away back when Democratic senators were assailed by Republican leaders instead of by Democratic leaders?

The World Horse Traders held a convention in Almond, N. Y., the other day. And if they ran true to form no delegate went home in the automobile in which he arrived.

Whatever became of that Russian-Japanese war?

Candidates for the Firing Squad.

Consider Otis Wilbur Swart—
He says, "This summer's been so short!"
And train your gun on Chidsey Papp
Who says, "Why, August went like that!"

"The United States Bureau of Fisheries has completed investigations revealing that the established speed of a striped bass on its southward migration is 12 miles a day."—News item.

The Silver Lining

It is the crowded quarters which will suffer the most bombing. Those quarters, however, are inhabited by those who have not succeeded in life—the refuse of the community, in fact, which would be well rid of them. Besides, the explosions of the bombs will inevitably cause many cases of madness. The person whose nervous system is deficient will not be able to survive the shock. In this way, bombing will help us to discover the neurasthenics in our community and to remove them from social life.

Books And Things

By Lewis Gannett.

Europe, Vermont, Texas.

WHO'D ever have believed it possible—a book as good as the drawings Peggy Bacon made to illustrate it? Margaret Halsey's high-spirited account of an American exchange professor's wife's year in England "With Malice Toward Some" (Simon & Schuster, $2) is all of that. It is a first-rate lemon-meringue-pie book which means that it has a solid bottom crust, a tang in the middle, and is crisp and crunchy as well as fluffy on top.

This professor's wife was constantly comparing the English and the Americans, not wholly to the advantage of either. She rather preferred English interiors, uninfluenced by shiny pictures in magazines, to "the Schrafft-like interiors at home." English strawberries, she explains, make the American berry seem ectoplasmic. The famous calm of High street, Oxford, reminded her of the serenity of Times Square, New York. English breakfasts, she thought, must have been prepared in the evening and fanned all night. English talk impressed her: "These people do not talk, as so many Americans do, to make an impression on themselves by making a good impression on somebody else. They have already made a good impression on themselves and talk simply because they think sound is more manageable than silence."

Of course, Miss Halsey does not pretend to know all. "English life is seven-eighths below the surface like an iceberg," she says, "and living in England for a year constitutes merely an introduction to an introduction to it." It is possible that had she stayed longer in Sweden, she might not have remained so intensely in love with that "potted-plant civilization," or with Paris . . . Wherever she goes in print I shall gladly follow her. Her book is as perfect in its American way as in its English fashion, was E. M. Delafield's first "Diary of a Provincial Lady."

SINCLAIR LEWIS' advice to young novelists to get themselves jobs as filling-station attendants or grocers' clerks was indubitably sound, and not merely because, as Mr. Lewis pointed out, the returns of average authorship are slight. The boys and girls would learn a lot about interesting people, and we might be spared some of the all too abundant stories of frustrated young geniuses who cannot seem to get their masterpieces onto paper, and so in for alcohol, sex and revolution—at some one else's expense.

If there is any character in whom the American public is less interested than in the frustrated young genius I do not know who it is. Or any about which more pretty good writing is wasted. The latest example of the genre is John Hyde Preston's warm-hearted novel, "The Liberals" (John Day, $2.50). It tells the story of Philip Whitlock, a dramatist who returned from months in a wilderness cabin yearning "for five or six more people to absorb his painful awareness of himself." So he camped out with the Marston family.

Papa Marston is a tired, liberal industrialist, who in the crisis, of course, stands with his foreman and the company gunmen, and the younger generation bravely take the side of the workers. Both Phil and Ann are hurt; and Phil discovers that the idyllic escape to Vermont of which he had dreamed is impossible—that he must stay and fight; he feels a satisfying bloodlust to go out and kill a few gunmen or responsible stockholders. Curtains, with Phil at last able to write once more.

There is some good writing in this book, particularly when Mr. Preston writes of his own experience. There is a marvelous tale of a car going astray in a snowstorm, southbound out of Vermont; a good picture of the hate that boils in any decent human when he sees the police go berserk; and a keen analysis of a generation rotting because life seems purposeless, growing up feeling that there's no place for them in the world: "When you're not wanted it gives you a sense of sin to stay alive. Really, I think there never was a medieval monastery where men struggled against such a sense of sin as modern Americans have." Another passage describes the sense of futility of a man in his thirties, looking back on the high, strong passions of his twenties, and feeling old and empty and abandoned: "He would never write again." Mr. Preston himself is 32, but he will write again. Maybe better. It takes a long time to grow up in America.

"AND TELL OF TIME" (Houghton, $2.75), Laura Krey's novel of reconstruction days in Texas, is a 712-page novel by a self-conscious, mannered pupil of Stark Young (remember "So Red the Rose") and admirer of "Gone With the Wind." The "dim murmur of the cypresses and the locusts," the "laughter more racking than tears," the cape jasmine "wet with silvery dew" and the graves marked "Soldier of the Confederacy, Servant of Christ" got me down within a hundred pages. The Daughters of the Confederacy may like it better.

The Association of American Railroads reported yesterday that Class 1 railroads had more new freight cars on order August 1 than at any other time this year.

The number, 10,234, compared with 5,021 on July 1 this year and 38,069 on August 1 last year.

New Type Of War

On 10th Anniversary of Kellogg Peace Pact.

By the Associated Press.

UNDECLARED wars rage on two continents while the Nation observes this week the tenth anniversary of the Kellogg Pact designed to outlaw war.

Historians say that the Kellogg Pact, intended to eliminate war "as an instrument of national policy," has had the unfortunate effect of producing a new type of conflict—the undeclared war and even the concealed war.

It was signed in Paris on August 27, 1928, by 15 nations and was subsequently joined by 48 others.

Though it has been flouted by some, the United States Government still considers it alive and in effect, State Department officials said yesterday.

• • • •

IT WAS INVOKED only last May when Secretary of State Hull, in the Czech-German crisis, called attention of Germany and Czechoslovakia to the fact that they were signatories.

The pact grew out of an informal suggestion by M. Aristides Briand, French foreign minister in 1927. He proposed to Frank B. Kellogg, then Secretary of State, that their countries sign a treaty stipulating they would never war against each other. This was to replace their treaty of arbitration, expiring in 1928.

Kellogg suggested that the declaration be embodied in a general treaty to which all nations should be invited to adhere. The two nations drew up the treaty and others were invited to sign.

• • • •

"Article. I. The high contracting parties solemnly declare in the names of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies, and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another.

"Article II. The high contracting parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means."

• • • •

ONLY FIVE NATIONS—Argentina, Bolivia, El Salvador, Uruguay and Yemen—held aloof from the treaty. Within less than a year it was invoked for the first time, when Russia and China fought along the Manchurian border and general war between them seemed imminent.

Briand and the then Secretary of State, Henry L. Stimson, called attention of the two belligerents to the fact that they had signed the Kellogg pact. The general war did not develop.

However, the pact did not prevent the Chaco war of 1932-1935 between Bolivia, which had not signed it, and Paraguay.

Then in 1931 Japan invaded Manchuria, fought China and eventually detached Manchuria from China—all without declaring war.

• • • •

IN 1935 ITALY invaded Ethiopia, also without declaring war. The next summer the Spanish civil war broke out and fighters from Italy, Soviet, Russia and Garmany entered the arena on one side or the other—without their countries declaring war.

Finally, Japan again invaded China last summer, without declaring war.

The TVA notifies us of two additional films, "Scenic Resources of the Tennessee Valley" (one reel, silent), and "Motion Study Applied to Letter Indexing" (one reel, voice by Milton Cross). . . Like the papa who commanded his young son to visit the woodshed to atone his errors under the hair brush, the United Federal Workers of America predicated its late blast at the American Federation of Government Employes, with the philosophic balm of "it hurts us too, but you need it."

Actually, the U. F. W. A. considered it "impolitic to take issue with any group of employes who have joined together in a union for the protection of the mutual interests . . . Unions have enough to do without fencing with each other . . . There are too many unorganized employes to waste time at intramural sniping." The long amens to this observation come from this column, which has long wished that a responsible representative of one of the several unions would call a mass meeting of them all with the aim of establishing peace.

To think that all unions would respond to such a clarion may be too much in the realities; but should a representative gathering from all the unions result it would be to demonstrate publicly that the rank and file are desirious of a united front—and if enough of them show this attitude, the holders-back may take the spot-lighted cue.

Robert E. Fellers, superintendent, division of stamps, is sojourning at Atlantic City, and on Wednesday leaves for Chicago, where he will represent the Postoffice Department at the convention of the Society of Philatelic Americans . . . Comes a card from Roy Miller, Agriculture editor and squire of Mohielan Hills, who is sojourning in New England.

The gentleman who is occupying Miller's house during his absence called us yesterday to announce that Miller's cat has blessed the premises with six kittens. We hope Miller won't read the above, as it would be bad to shadow his vacation.

We hear from Harry G. Ritner, GAO employe and editor of the Washington Federal Bulletin, as follows: "Call it by any name you may please, but after reading 24 Appeals, D. C. 95, any board or tribunal established under Executive order of June 24 will still give to the head of the department through his personnel manager the right to determine as to the 'employes fitness, capacity and attention to his duties,' because they are questions of discretion and judgment . . . To employes who have resigned taking with them the retirement reductions and then re-entered the service at a later period without making redeposit, here is good news: amendment to the retirement act in the last session of Congress excuses redeposit with accordingly reduced retirement annuities. Heretofore, retirement benefits were predicated upon redeposit of funds withdrawn . . . Part-time attorneys who will defend civil actions after September 16 might be confronted with the question, 'do you have an office?' (new court order).

Ira Y. Bain, head of the personnel division, Internal Revenue, is recovering from an operation for appendicitis . . . If you intend going to the A. F. G. E.'s national convention in Chicago next month, you might get in on the greatly reduced transportation rates which the national office has arranged. They say it will be an interesting convention—and some would predict a display of fireworks, but we don't think so. It's the usual old rumor, because no one likes to anticipate a peaceful convention.

The following members of the service division, Internal Revenue, have transferred, as follows: Elizabeth Cain and Rita E. Cartin, to the technical staff, New York City; Mrs. Catherine Schmelzer, to the technicat staff, Portland, Oreg., and Florence Wilson to the income tax unit, main building.

On-coming spectacle, which we don't propose to miss: The game of bicycle polo which the fast-riding Interior Department Recreation Association will introduce to Washington at the field day, Saturday.

Mr. Roper Fetes Stags With Watermelon Party

By Elizabeth Ford.

If there's any starch left in Washington society these warmish weeks, it disappeared completely, leaving no definable traces, at the "watah-melon" party given yesterday afternoon by Daniel C. Roper, Secretary of Commerce. And as the August sun waxed more eloquent, high Government officials, diplomatic rajahs, and gentlemen of Senatorial lustre, shed their coats and their formality in a mass attack on the piece de resistance of Mr. Roper's menu.

The party, an annual one, was this year, as always, unflinchingly stag, and marked a welcome respite from the Capital's doldrums which every season about this time settle down like a swarm of melancholy locusts on the social terrain in this part of the country.

The watermelons, reputed to weigh 60 pounds apiece, grew up on the South Carolina farm of David R. Croker, son-in-law of Mr. Roper, and arrived in Washington on Saturday. They met their Waterloo from 5 to 7 o'clock, while some 200 Capital gourmets showed their teeth and fired ahead.

Mrs. Roper Assists In Receiving Guests

Mrs. Roper assisted her husband in receiving the guests who, contrary to social shibboleth, arrived on time.

Among the gentlemen asked around to the Secretary's home on Woodland drive was the Minister of Canada, Sir Herbert Marler, who in between slices smoked his excellent Canadian cigarettes; the Secretary of Agriculture, Henry A. Wallace; the Ambassador of Mexico, Dr. Francisco Castillo Najera, and Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of naval operations.

Still others who were there were Charles Edison, Assistant Secretary of the Navy; Witold Wankowicz, Counselor of the Polish Embassy, who himself has been host at several informal gatherings this summer; Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board; Sir Owen Chalkley, Commercial Counselor of the British Embassy, and Judge Harold Stephens, of the District Court of Appeals.

Admiral Waesche Is at the Party

Also Rear Admiral R. R. Waesche, chief of the United States Coast Guard; Ralph William Close, the Minister of the Union of South Africa; Senator George L. Radcliffe, of Maryland; delegates of the Canadian and British trade commissions; gilded members of the Fourth Estate and many others.

With Mr. Coker, who shipped the watermelons up for the feast, came his wife and their three young daughters, the Misses Martha, Mary and Caroline Coker. Martha, who is the oldest of the trio, will be a senior this autumn at Coker College and will take her degree in math. Mary and Caroline are students at the Hartsville High School, in Hartsville, S. C. All three of them speak French fluently and are excellent pianists.

Olive Hurlburt Guest Of Woman's Party Here

Miss Olive Hurlburt was guest of honor yesterday at a reception given in the garden of Alva Belmont House, headquarters of the National Woman's Party. The D. C. branch was hostess and Mrs. Horace W. Pote, the chairman, presided.

Miss Hurlburt, who is State chairman for Michigan and also chairman of the program for the national convention to be held in Detroit in October, talked briefly, telling of convention plans. Mrs. Helena Hill Weed, who organized the Michigan branch in 1915, told of its formation, and Miss Emma Wheeler, formerly of Grand Rapids, and now an attorney in the District, also spoke. Miss Wheeler will head the District of Columbia delegation to the convention.

The Misses Marilyn Williams and Marie Louise Ralph presided at the punch table and the Misses Janet Ralph and Marguerite Pote assisted in receiving the guests.

Wanda Sanger Becomes Bride

Married to Morton Duffer; Christopher—Averett Bridal Also Held.

Of interest to Washington and Virginia are two weddings which took place last week in Harrisonburg and Lynchburg, Va., respectively.

The First Presbyterian Church of Harrisonburg was the scene on August 18 of the marriage of Miss Wanda Violet Sanger, daughter of Mrs. Clyde H. Sanger, of that city, and Morton H. Duffer, of Johnson City, Tenn. The Rev. Parks W. Wilson officiated. The couple are now on a trip to Niagara Falls and Canada.

Given in marriage by her brother, Clyde Hampton Sanger, the bride was attired in white satin fashioned on princess lines. Her veil fell from a coronet of orange blossoms, and she carried a shower bouquet of roses and baby's breath.

Mrs. David Whitfield Funkhouser was her sister's matron of honor. Paul A. Duffer served his brother as best man, while the ushers were Ralph Aldhizer, Richard Lineweaver, Saylor Derrer and Aubrey Duffer.

The second wedding took place in Lynchburg on August 17, when Miss Imogen Elizabeth Averett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Wise Averett, became the bride of Elden Washington Christopher, son of Mrs. Thomas William Christopher. Dr. George D. Heaton performed the ceremony at the home of the bride's parents. The couple will make their home at Callao, Va., after a northern trip.

Vaccinations Urged Early

Mrs. Ellett Suggests Child Starting School Be Immunized Now.

Mrs. P. C. Ellett, fifth vice president of the D. C. Congress of Parents and Teachers, and also director of its department of health, has urged the immunization of kindergarten and first grade children before school begins. Mrs. Ellett has just gone with her family to the Virginia beaches for a two weeks' vacation.

"I would like to urge that every child entering school for the first time be immunized against diphtheria," said Mrs. Ellett," before she left.

"It is, of course, desirable for parents financially able to do so, to take their children to the family physician," she said, "but in cases where it is not possible for them to pay for this service, the Health Department Vaccination Clinic at 230 Third street northwest, will administer the toxoid free of charge.

"Good health is such an asset, particularly during school years, that if it is possible for a child to enter school for the first time, entirely free from remediable defects, his chances are so much better for normal progress and happy association. Even the required smallpox vaccination should be secured before school opens so that if there is disturbance from the administration of this vaccine, it will have disappeared by September 19."

In addition to sounding this note of caution, Mrs. Ellett announced that the dental work so successfully carried through last year by the Parent-Teacher Congress, the D. C. Health Department and the D. C. Dental Society, would undoubtedly be continued again this year, assuring follow-up work for children whose mouths were inspected in 1937, as a result of which thousands of dental corrections have been made.

Their marriage took place Saturday in the garden of the home of Brig. Gen. Rufus H. Lane, U. S. M. C., retired, and Mrs. Lane at Falls Church. Dr. William H. McMaster, father of the bride, officiated. He retired this spring from the presidency of Mount Union College in Alliance, Ohio, and this winter will be a member of the faculty of the University of Miami. Mrs. Thompson is the former Miss Isabella Thoburn McMaster. Her husband is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Allen D. Thompson, of Carlisle, Pa.

Sister Acts as Maid of Honor

Miss Janet Lyle McMaster, of New York, was her sister's maid of honor and was attired in blue chiffon. She wore a coronet of flowers. Little Ellen Styles, daughter of the second secretary of the United States Legation in Canada, a cousin of Miss McMaster, was the flower girl. Her frock was of white organdy.

David Irvin Thompson, of Carlisle, was his brother's best man.

The ceremony was followed by a reception and buffet supper. The bride's mother, Mrs. McMaster, who received, wore a gown of white lace and a corsage of purple orchids. Mrs. Thompson, mother of the bridegroom, was in gray chiffon, while Mrs. Lane, the bride's aunt, wore flowered chiffon.

Bride Attended Barnard College

Classes in Tennis Planned by Y. W.

Swimming Beginners Will Also Meet.

With the summer heat of Washington at its height, most of the program activities at the Y. W. C. A. have been deferred until the fall season. The health education department, however, furnishes opportunity for relaxation.

A class for tennis beginners will start on Thursday at 5:15 and will meet every Tuesday and Thursday thereafter. A class for swimming beginners will start tomorrow at 7. Miss Clara Boyd Wheeler, of the physical education staff, instructs these classes.

This evening there will be a community night at 614 E street, with singing and dancing by members of the Junior Girls' Club.

The Wednesday Club will meet for a musical program at 2:30. Mrs. James W. Anderson, of the E street committee, will be the hostess.

A summer circus is scheduled for the Junior Girls' Club at 614 E street, on Friday, at 7. Mrs. Anne Klesius, recreation assistant at E street, is in charge of the arrangements for the evening of fun.

Bulletins are now out announcing the fall bus trips sponsored by the industrial and education departments of the Y. W. C. A. The first trip will be to Williamsburg, Va.; another is planned for the Smoky Mountain National Park, and the last trip will be routed to Wakefield and Stratford.

The dictation classes are continuing until September 15.

Arlington Home For Shepherds

Couple, Married Saturday, Will Reside There After Honeymoon.

Now on a motor trip to Avon Park, Fla., Mr. and Mrs. Philip Overton Shepherd, jr., will make their home at 1224 Vernon street in Arlington upon their return. They were married Saturday afternoon by the Rev. Lee D. Palmore at an attractive ceremony in the garden of the home of the bride's parents in Crewe, Va.

Mrs. Shepherd is the former Miss Marion Elizabeth Laycock, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Edward Laycock. Mr. Shepherd is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Overton Shepherd, of Arlington, Va.

Bride Escorted By Her Father

Escorted by her father down an aisle on either side of which stood five flower girls and five pages with large baskets of flowers, the bride was gowned in white silk organdie over white satin. It was fashioned on princess lines and trimmed with a heart-shaped neckline, puffed sleeves and a circular train. Her veil of tulle was held in place by clusters of gardenias and she carried a shower bouquet of white garden flowers.

Mrs. Howard Annis, of Arlington, served as matron of honor for her sister and wore a white dimity frock over white satin. Her bouquet was composed of flowers in pastel shades. Miss Barbara Shepherd, sister of the bridegroom, was maid of honor and was attired in a dress similar to that of the matron of honor.

Howard Annis, brother-in-law of the bride, was best man, while Burton Bates, of Arlington, served as usher.

Marraige Rites Reception After

Immediately following the ceremony a reception was held for members of the wedding party and for out-of-town guests, of which there were about 100. Gowned in ashes of roses lace over taffeta of the same shade, Mrs. Laycock, mother of the bride, assisted her daughter and son-in-law in receiving. A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Aug. 21.

OF ALL the saddest people I'm for, Ed Wynn tops the list at the moment. Many a funny man has tragedy in his life, but it does seem that fate takes an unbearable number of solid boots at poor Ed. For 25 years he has, to millions of us, been one of the world's most comical citizens. In his most recent musical comedy at the Winter Garden he reached the summit of his hilarious art—and one felt certain that here was a man whose buffoonery bubbled from a happy heart.

ALICE HUGHES.

But it is not so. Ed Wynn has wife-trouble, and has had for years. His first spouse was the very beautiful daughter of the late Frank Keenan, the actor. He cared for her tenderly for many years, but to no avail, and finally they parted. Now, we thought, Ed will find peace and happiness with Frieda Mierse, the lovely former Follies girl. But it wasn't to be. And perhaps you have read Frieda's ill-timed and tactless statements to the public press.

"The only trouble is that Ed's old and I'm young," she told reporters. He's 52, she is 25. "Ed wants to stay home all the time; I want to dine on starlit roofs and dance, and have fun." She indicated two bandaged toes scuffed from social hoofing, and also pointed to a tall, stalwart young man she described as "her gigolo"—a paid dancing partner at $20 a night. She also said she was undergoing a course of expensive psychoanalysis. "I'm tired of being suppressed and depressed. I want life!"

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—I have just talked to a woman who has come back from Arden's gorgeous and costly health farm called Maine Chance, up in Maine, and she reports that all the belles in residence are getting slim and beautiful. Probably the star of the current crop is Ina Claire (nee Fagan), the stage star, who trots about her daily chores in a fetching yellow play-suit, and who continues to make a fool of the fatal forties, so lovely is she . . .

• • • •

Incidentally, Arden, who races under the name of Mrs. E. G. Lewis, saw one of her bangtails come in at Saratoga at a ripe 20 to 1. Its name is Great Union. Well, a $20 note properly attached to the nose of that baby would have stalled off the installment collector for a couple of months.

• • • •

Now and then the heat, or something, gets one of our girls. An innocent rookie cop, keeping an eye on Central Park's rocks and rills the other evening, was appalled to see a young lady dancing blithely in the rain, wearing only her birthday suit. The unhappy youth flung his raincoat about her and took her to clink, where she told the sergeant that she liked very much to dance that way in the rain. The sarge, not impressed, sent the lady to Bellevue, where the brain-pickers will inspect her for termites in the skull. No such thing as freedom in this world.

The seasons go cockeyed in the commercial world, confusing all concerned. For instance, the greeting card people are working 24 hours a day getting out the Christmas cards, and my pal, Cora Scovil, queen of the mannequin makers and an ace store-window designer, is at this moment creating realistic snow storms for the holiday displays along Fifth avenue. What cussed month is this, anyhow, with the fur coat sales raging unchecked.

The Modern Plaid—Practical or Glamorous

IF YOU CAN discover even a twig of Scotch ancestry in your family tree, or even if you can't—by all means have something plaid in your fall wardrobe. For no matter what your nationality, plaid can be depended upon to make you look youthful and jaunty. With everything running to color, plaids are in for a big season and will be worn from morning until midnight. Many persons who can claim even a distant relationship to a Caampbell or a Douglas or a Bruce or any other Scotsman will be having dresses, jackets and scarfs made in the authentic clan plaids. But there are all sorts of other beautiful combinations, and perhaps the matter of becomingness should be considered before family pride. Big bright-colored plaids will be featured this season, but there will be also soft subdued ones in pastel tones. Above are shown two variations of the plaid—one for daytime, one for evening. The girl at left has on a dark green and yellow plaid that would be ideal for either college or business. A zipper joins the windbreaker top, which conceals a dark green sweater. At right Maureen O'Sullivan, movie actress, demonstrates how plaid chiffon with a ruffled ladylike train and prim velvet bows can do service as a hostess gown. It's form-fitting, sophisticated effect is offset by demure white ruching at throat and at sleeves.

Babyhood Often Marks Inception Of Tuberculosis

by Logan Clendening, M. D.

THE QUESTION of whether tuberculosis can be caught from a consumptive is not as simple as it may seem on first sight. The theories on the matter have gone through a number of changes.

A hundred years ago, when very little was known about the cause of tuberculosis, the idea was that it was not contagious at all. Then the French physician, Villemin, pointed out that if a case of consumption were brought into a hospital ward, several other cases would develop there. He was an army physician and he put his conclusions this way: "The consumptive soldier is just as much a danger to his fellows in the regiment as a sheep with anthrax is to the rest of the herd."

When the cause of tuberculosis—the tubercle bacillus—was discovered, opportunity was afforded for more intensive study of early cases. The conclusions arrived at were that tuberculosis probably always begins in infancy or very early life. It goes through a certain stage of development in childhood. Childhood tuberculosis is entirely different from adult tuberculosis.

The child usually catches tuberculosis from an adult in the family who has an open unsuspected case of tuberculosis of the lungs. The course of the disease depends on the amount of immunity that can be developed—most often the condition gets well in childhood and leaves nothing but a scar. Sometimes it goes on and develops consumption.

The question of whether an adult can cacth the disease from another is not entirely settled. One view states flatly that nobody catches tuberculosis after childhood. But there are others who disagree. Myers, for instance, studied groups of medical students and nurses in training—groups that are likelv to be exposed to patients with tuberculosis—and found that they did become infected in a far larger percentage than that of the general population.

So the safest thing is to avoid exposure. This especially is true of infants. They frequently are infected by some old memebr of the household, who has had ac hronic bronchitis for years. At least, that is what it is called. Really, when an examination is made, it turns out the epdson has had tuberculosis unsuspected for many years.

The Helpful Host.

MR. PUFFER—Now if you'll all excuse me, I'll just look over the paper while you girls talk.

MRS. GINK—That's perfectly all right, Mr. Puffer.

MISS SMACK—Yes, don't let us disturb you——

MRS. PUFFER—Have either of you heard anything more about Clara and Pete?

MRS. GINK—Well, I saw Ethel Twitter yesterday——

MRS. PUFFER—What did she say?

MR. PUFFER—Say, here's something interesting: Did any of you know that we get most of our linseed from Lithuania?

MISS SMACK—Is that so?

MR. PUFFER—Yes; that's what it says here. There's a whole article here on Lithuania—it's most interesting.

MRS. GINK—I imagine it must be—well Ethel said that Pete had moved into a hotel after the big fracas——

MRS. PUFFER—What big fracas?

MRS. GINK—Oh, didn't you know about that?

MISS SMACK—It's all over town.

MRS. GINK—Well, I got it from Ethel and of course I wouldn't want it to go any further, but it seems that Pete came home——

MR. PUFFER—Say, here's something surprising! I didn't know this about Lithuania——

MISS SMACK—How terribly interesting!

MRS. PUFFER—And Ethel said that Pete came home and——

MR. PUFFER—Say, it says here that Lithuania is a great geese raising country.

MISS SMACK—Is that so!

MRS. PUFFER—Go on about Pete coming home . . .

MRS. GINK—Well, you see Clara thought Pete was in Detroit and she had the old man——

MRS. PUFFER—Old man! You don't mean it's an old man?

MRS. GINK—they say he's 68 if he's a day.

MISS SMACK—But he's got $5,000,000. He's given her——

MR. PUFFER—Did any of you know that 16 per cent of the land in Lithuania is forest?

MISS SMACK—Is that so?

MR. PUFFER—That's what it says here. This is a very interesting article. Wait till I find the place . . .

MRS. PUFFER—Go on about what that old man gave her.

MISS SMACK—He's given her simply everything—a diamond clip——

MRS. GINK—Yes, and a mink cape and a bed jacket with real ermine sleeves——

MR. PUFFER—Here's the place. It says——

MRS. PUFFER—Oh, Sam, they don't want to hear that.

MRS. GINK—Oh, yes, we do, Mr. Puffer; go right ahead.

MISS SMACK—Yes, it's so interesting.

MR. PUFFER—You know there's a lot of information in this article. Lithuania's a very remarkable country——

MRS. PUFFER—Well, what I want to know is—what happened when Pete came home?

MRS. GINK—Well, Ethel said—and I wouldn't want anybody to know this came from her—you see her maid knows Clara's maid——

MRS. PUFFER—Yes, go on——

MRS. GINK—Well she said that Pete had had a detective on Clara's trail——

MR. PUFFER—It says here that the principal trees in Lithuania——

MISS SMACK—Is that so?

MRS. PUFFER—Go on about Pete.

MRS. GINK—Well, you see Pete left his car down the street and then slipped up on the back porch in his stocking feet——

MR. PUFFER—It says here that the principal trees in Lithuania——listening?

MISS SMACK—Oh, yes, we're listening. Go right ahead.

MRS. GINK—And got in through the kitchen and went down the hall to the living room and then suddenly threw open the door and——

MR. PUFFER—Say, do you girls want to hear this piece on Lithuania or not?

Unnatural Tints Are 'Unelegant,' Coiffeur Decides

Movie stars always have stereotyped hairdresses.

The Duchess of Windsor has changed her coiffure once in 14 years.

Marlene Deitrich is not hair-style conscious.

"Platinum or other unnatural tints are definitely unelegant," Antoine has decided, although there was a time when he prided himself on his pastel colored evening coiffures. "Wigs are uncalled for. Every woman has natural hair that can be made beautiful with the proper care."

What is elegance? "It cannot yet be found in America, for America is still too satisfied with its machines and the work they do," says Antoine. "Nor can it ever be found in public places. Its chief quality is exclusiveness."

The only two women he could name as being always elegant and individual in every detail of appearance are Princess Faucigny Lucinge and Mme. Reginald Fellowes, formerly Princess de Breuil.

The up coiffure is only one way of achieving elegance. Other elegantizing methods—Antoine is very fond of the word—which cost anywhere from $6 to $60 a head.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

After Years of Devotion, Grown Son Turns Against His Mother; Does It Mean He's Unbalanced?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have a son whom I love devotedly and he has always shown the deepest interest in my happiness and welfare. He had a severe illness that kept him in bed over a year. During his illness he manifested the greatest patience and resignation. But now he has recovered sufficiently to be able to return to his profession. During his illness it devolved upon me to meet all his expenses, which I did most willingly. I continued to do this even after he saw fit to be married, without being in a position to support a wife. Notwithstanding the fact that he did not consult me (perhaps he was within his rights in not doing so), I voiced no objection, but took his wife into our home and into my heart.

• • • •

Fortunately, on recovery he secured a lucrative position which he filled acceptably but which he was not physically strong enough to retain. I still stood by to assist him in every possible way . . . He has now secured another lucrative position, but a nightmare has occurred in the form of a complete breaking away from me, of a complete withdrawal of all filial love and concern. He did not even acknowledge receipt of a letter I wrote telling him I had made a payment (which took over half my salary) on one of his pressing financial obligations.

• • • •

The cause of the sudden break is this: I do not agree with him in a constant flow of criticism directed at his relatives and family, myself included. I will say that the family has a fine background, and while I do not say they are more perfect than the rest of humanity, still education and refinement are qualities of which we are proud. My son seems to find delight in criticizing and censuring all of them. He has grown very angry because I have not agreed with him in his tirade against those who have always shown him the greatest consideration and kindness—especially during the time he lay so ill.

• • • •

Now Miss Haworth, I would like to know what you think has caused this sudden change in the attitude of my son toward his loved ones. Is it an aberration of his mind? Has the effect of his severe illness anything to do with his trend of thought? I, as his mother, have held a position in the Government service for 15 years, am a consistent member of the church and by precept as well as by example have reared a family of seven children to know the difference between good and evil. On Mother's Day the expressions which they give me would make any mother's heart glad. Now, why this change on the part of this son for whom so much has been done? If you can throw light on this inexplicable problem, I shall be most grateful.

READER.

Half-Told Tale.

DEAR READER: It is apparent that you haven't told the whole story by any manner of means. One senses that consciously or unconsciously, you are glossing over much that is pertinent, if the real reason for your son's boutface is to be defined. One wonders if those things you have omitted to say aren't things which you don't care to set forth, lest they bring you face to face with the truth; lest you find that, from your son's point of view, at least, his reaction is largely justifiable.

• • • •

You have left so much to the reader's imagination that I am forced to rely on intuition in trying to answer your question. And yet, the story falls almost effortlessly into the possessive mother and dominated son classification. The hapless sons of such mothers are forced to resort to desperate if not violent expedients if they are eventually to be free of their mother's devouring emotional claims; if they are ever to complete the weaning process which should have been inaugurated in infancy and completed in adolescence.

• • • •

It would appear that your son had been, until his marriage, the last child left to you; possibly the youngest son; possibly a sort of mama's boy and mollycoddle, however much against his will and inclination. Possibly you tried to enslave him with too much love, with the expectation of receiving an unnatural amount in return. Possibly you tried to thrust the role of exclusive companion and ever-dependable prop upon him, when all the time and with his whole soul he yearned to be free to live a young man's life with his contemporaries.

• • • •

You do not state the nature of his "severe illness," but one wonders if it was, perhaps, a so-called "nervous breakdown," which is the catastrophic outward manifestation of an insupportable inner conflict, of a kind which could be occasioned by overweening parental expectancy opposing wholesome personal preference. You say nothing against (yet nothing for) his wife; and one wonders if this may not be a studied omission, designed to deflect the thought that you may be just one more possessive mother, jealous of her too well loved son's marital choice. If you are trying to deflect that thought, it would mean there is some lurking suspicion in your own mind that it is apropos.

• • • •

You do not say why the sudden disagreement over the merits of your (and his) family—it's background, education and refinement. Yet if its merits are being discussed and disputed, it must be in relation to some comparable thing. Was it, perhaps, in contrast to his wife's background? It seems a reasonable deduction. I can imagine that your family might have united to disparage and condemn her for marrying a sick man who could offer her no other current means of support than his mother's roof and hard-earned income. And I can imagine that he might have retorted that as between his family (and all that it stands for and has meant to him) and his wife and and what she means to him, he'll take the latter.

• • • •

And I can imagine, too, that it would have taken a great deal of courage, an immeasurable quantity of doggedly determined and unselfish devotion, on a girl's part to marry a sick man under such circumstances. Certainly she was contemplating no bed of roses; asking nothing but the opportunity of aiding the man she loved in rehabilitating himself, physically, psychologically, financially and professionally.

• • • •

His failure to discuss their marriage plans with you in advance of marriage suggests that both recognized such a move would meet with well-argued opposition; and yet the fact that it is working out would indicate that only overtly plausible reasons stood against it. If their confidence was denied you, it must have been that they recognized you as a subtle enemy of their plans—an enemy so subtle, perhaps, that once the (to her) undesirable had been accomplished, she suavely accepted it, thinking yet to play the final card that would give the game to her.

• • • •

On the surface, little excuse can be made for your son's failure to acknowledge receipt of the letter which told of your having made a sacrificial payment on one of his pressing financial obligations. And yet, he may so distrust your seeming generosity, may recognize it so clearly as a too-to--loving trap designed to play him into your hands—that he deems it best to waive civility for safety. Such an attitude, based on such reasoning would indicate, of course, that he is not yet wholly mature. His very indebtedness to you may frighten him; be a yoke on his spirit; so that he does not feel free to thank you for it, lest in thanking he recommit himself to the former enslavement.

• • • •

I think that in proportion as you have overdone for your son, seeking thus to bind him to your side, to that degree have you estranged him. I believe that you have acted in such a way as to make it almost unbearably hard for him to break away, and that it is difficult for him to forgive you for what you have caused him to do to you, in breaking away. It is my guess that you have caused him to feel that he is less than a man, and no man can love the woman (even though she be his mother) who wittingly or unwittingly deals that blow to him. The best advice I can give you is to stop the one-sided flow of oppressive gratuities; to let him stand on his own feet and meet his own obligations from now on; and to cease to remind him of or to reproach him for what you, of your own free will and largely for your own pleasure, have done for him in the past.

Incidentally, the melodramatic quality of your attitude toward yourself, in relation to him, is betrayed in that slip of the pen which reads, "I, as his mother, have held a position, etc." What you have done as an adult in a professional capacity, by the way of being self-supporting, had no more to do with your being his mother than it had to do with your being the mother of any other of your seven children. If you hadn't been anybody's mother, and had been confronted with occupational necessity and opportunity, your workaday record might have amounted to much the same thing.

Unrefined Food Needed Element In Adult's Diet

B1 Vitamin Deficiency Can Lead to Many Minor Annoyances.

By Ida Jean Kain.

A VITAMIN B1 deficiency may not be pronounced enough to give you beri-beri, the B deficiency receiving the most publicity, but the long list of minor annoyances resulting from a lack of this vitamin is enough to make strong men eat their whole grain cereal without a mutter of protest.

Before we say another word you are probably primed with the time-worn masculine argument that your grandfather, who never heard of a vitamin, lived to be 90! If your grandfather lived to any such age—and I don't doubt that he did—you may be certain that he got his vitamins, particularly B1.

Grandfather's Diet.

In your grandfather's time, cereals and flour were not as highly refined as we like them. Much of the Vitamin B content of these foods is destroyed in overmilling. In the latest and most comprehensive study of this vitamin, "Vitamin B1 and its Use in Medicine," Dr. Robert R. Williams and Dr. Tom Douglas Spies go so far as to suggest that prevention of B1 deficiency could be obtained if the manufacturers incorporated the vitamin in cereals and other refined foods.

They also recommend extremely simple preventive measures which may be carried out by the individual, whose diet can be greatly improved by the substitution of fresh foods, such as potatoes and native vegetables, pork and liver, eggs, milk, fruits, beans and whole grain cereals, for a diet of decorticated cereals and dried or canned foods.

Where mass feeding is required, as with troops or institutions, they advise the use of undermilled rather than overmilled grains, and, again in the case of the individual, dietary supplements such as dried yeast, wheat germ, liver, kidney, and Vitamin B1 crystals.

Beri-Beri Mence.

But you are still skeptical about the necessity for this vitamin? You have heard of beri-beri and the probabilities are that your diet will never be so deficient as to give you anything like that. Granted, but your health may be impaired by a vitamin deficiency long before that deficiency recahes the acute stage. According to the two authorities who authored this study of Vitamin B1, an inadequate intake may manifest itself in such subclinical symptoms as nervousness, apprehension, forgetfulness, numbness, loss of appetite, loss of strength and weight, and in a number of other disturbing conditions.

Among the more serious diseases to be successfully treated by the administration of Vitamin B1 are polyneuritis and alcoholic cerrhosis of the liver.

Over the Coffee

HOME TOWN VISIT.

Oil station men wonder why Washingtonians are such travelers . . . In almost every tourist camp across the land nestles overnight a car with a District of Columbia license . . . No other principality so small sends forth so many wanderers on every highway every summer.

• • • •

Mrs. Jimmy . . . like Hepburn?

It's because Washington is almost as mathematically representative of the Republic's population as the House of Representatives . . . Almost every Washingtonian has a home town somewhere; 110,000 Washingtonians get 30 days vacation a year; so every year or two he is off for a glimpse of the one and only Main Street.

• • • •

His wife sees all the new babies, and hears about the ones due to arrive, while he discovers the golf game of his old pals has improved faster than his own . . . Some of his friends in their 30s have given up all forms of exercise, while others have taken up tennis with the passion of a bull-ring aficionado.

"they want to argue about FDR"

A few of those who were anti-Roosevelt last Christmas are now defending him, while a few more who were whooping it up for him last summer are now saying "Yes, but——" . . . Most haven't changed their minds . . . One of the elderly widows has a new beau . . .

• • • •

It seems strange in the old town without a league ball team . . . Some of your high school pals who are beginning to gray a little prematurely at the temples are ribbing other high school pals who have premature bald spots . . . Several of the "young married" crowd have been up to the Mayo clinic to find out if anything is wrong with them.

• • • •

And the whole town knows the docs told 'em a package and a half of cigarettes a day are worse than two highballs, and several in that crowd have sworn off . . . At dinner parties the conservatives try to blame you for everything the New Deal has done, because you live in Washington . . . You gracefully accept some of the blame.

• • • •

Some young squirt is too incredulous when he hears that you were once an all-star footballer . . . When you try to concentrate on one of the new crop of blondes on the edge of the pool on a moonlit night someone wants to discuss Franklin Roosevelt . . . The boy from whom you borrowed the first tailcoat you ever wore is now on WPA . . . On an August night your friends will be talking about the State University football team and the new star halfback.

"—politics by moonlight"

You run into the richest man in town, and he wants to know if it's true that the President always laughs loudly at funerals . . . He also wants to know whether it's Tommy Corcoran or Eleanor Roosevelt who writes FDR's speeches . . . When you say neither, he looks at you suspiciously . . . "Does Mrs. Jimmy Roosevelt look like Katharine Hepburn?"

• • • •

The old swimming hole, you find, has been obliterated with WPA money . . . All three of the ole swimmin' holes, in fact—all surrounded with concrete walls and new sewers and bridges—and replaced by new swimming pools which haven't the same rich flavor.

• • • •

Some of the young enchanted couples have been divorced and some of the divorcees remarried . . . A new crowd has taken over the country club and some of the old crowd is muttering a little on the sidelines . . . Main Street is such a welter of neon signs at night that you can't see all the new traffic lights . . . You drive past the house where you were born, and are amazed to find the neighbors still have a flock of ducks, and someone wants to bet you $10 that FDR will or won't be elected for a third term.

Tydings Hit For Boast of Veterans' Aid

Lewis Aide Says Record Does Not Show Him Soldiers' Friend.

By the Associated Press.

Salisbury, Md., Aug. 21.—Charles J. Newell, of the Lewis-for-Senate Veterans League, attacked Senator Tydings' record "as a veterans' friend" today and said a Tydings' campaign booklet on the Senator's work for veterans was "the most warped, distorted, if not deliberately dishonest piece of campaign literature that I ever have seen."

Decrying the report of Bruce T. Bair, out-going commander of the Maryland American Legion, as violating the Legion's constitution, which he said prohibits the Legion from "taking part in partisan politics," Newell said since the organization had been plunged into politics, "I propose that we keep the record straight."

Bair, in his report, denounced President Roosevelt's indorsement of Representative Lewis for the Senate and praised Tydings.

In a radio address here Newell said a Tydings' campaign booklet "claims that Col. Tydings served on the Veterans' Committee in the House of Representatives and took part in establishing the Veterans' Administration, etc.

"Now, the real fact is that Tydings was appointed on a committee to draft veterans' legislation, but he served for exactly ten days and then resigned. He may deny that, but the Congressional Record is clear."

Newell invited Tydings to "explain why he shirked that duty."

"There are some other things we should like to have explained," he added. "Tydings," he said, "claims in his booklet that he voted to increase Spanish-American War veterans pensions. But the record does not show it one way or the other. Again he advertises that he voted for the broadening of hospitalization for veterans. Again the record does not show it. There was no record vote, and the roll call showed Tydings as 'not present.'"

Charles (Buck) Joy, 65, Hillside (Md.) plasterer, was charged with murder yesterday in the death of Eugene Geary, 42, World War veteran. Meanwhile, Prince Georges County police were searching for a third man reported to have been in Geary's home at Hillside early Saturday when he was fatally wounded by a shotgun blast.

Joy was held without bail at the Hyattsville (Md.) Jail pending an inquest.

Geary's body was found Saturday night by a neighbor, Joseph Petrillo. Joy, who lived in a cabin in the rear of Geary's home, told police he heard a shot about 2 a. m. Saturday and went into Geary's house to find the veteran shot in the left forearm. Joy said he carried Geary to the bed and returned to his cabin. Dr. William Brainin, of Capitol Heights, said Geary had died from loss of blood about 6 a. m. Saturday.

Downs Compiles Data on Work Of Virginia's 126 Court Clerks

State Auditor's Report to Be Used by Compensation Board.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Aug. 21.—State Auditor L. McCarthy Downs has compiled for the Virginia Compensation Board the most comprehensive report yet made on the activities of the 126 court clerks of the Commonwealth's counties and cities.

The purpose of the compilation, made at the request of the board, of which Downs is a member, is to make available for comparative purposes a statement showing the work required of the clerks.

The auditor's compilation shows that during the calendar year 1937, 126,217 deeds were recorded, 8,745 chancery suits were instituted, 6,138 actions at law were instituted, 7,434 wills and administrations were probated, and 9,251 criminal cases were disposed of in the circuit, corporation and hustings courts. In addition, the clerks sold 140,888 hunting and fishing licenses and issued 32,767 marriage licenses.

Downs said that the classifications of the schedule did not embrace all the work of clerks in some sections, particularly in the cities and in counties adjacent to cities, where a considerable number of chattel mortgages and conditional sales contracts were recorded. These were omitted from the report so that a general comparison could be made.

The auditor reported that in addition to the 126 clerks, 289 full-time and 144 part-time employes carried on the work in the clerks' offices.

Although the figures have not been segregated by circuits, they show that the clerks' work ranged in counties between the following maximums and minimums for the various classifications:

Counties: Deeds recorded, Arlington, 7,282; Craig, 151. Chancery suits, Arlington, 179; Charles City, 6. Actions at law, Arlington, 180; Charles City, 1. Wills and administrations probated, Rockingham, 158; Charles City and Greene (tied), 7. Hunting and fishing licenses, Augusta, 4,354; Charles City, 18. Marriage licenses, Henry, 1,008; Charles City, 29. Criminal cases, Wise, 191; New Kent, 1.

Cities: Deeds, corporation court, Norfolk, 5,180; circuit court, Buena Vista, 179. Chancery suits, circuit court, Norfolk, 560; hustings court, Portsmouth, 11. Actions at law, law and equity court, Richmond, 506; circuit court, Beuna Vista, 1. Wills and administrations, chancery Richmond, 489; corporation court, Bristol, 9. Hunting and fishing licenses, hustings court, Richmond, 5,974; circuit court, Buena Vista, 224. Marriage licenses, hustings court, Richmond, 2,251; circuit court, Buena Vista, 67. Criminal cases, corporation court, Norfolk, 934; circuit court, Buena Vista, 2.

3d Term Issue Will Be Aired By Democrats

Session of Young Clubs Will Open Friday at Richmond.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Aug. 21.—Advance registrations indicate that nearly 1,500 delegates, a record-breaking number, will attend the convention of Virginia Young Democratic Clubs here Friday and Saturday, Executive Secretary John A. Currie said today.

Pre-convention interest was centered on a two-way battle for the presidency of the organization and speculation as to action on a third-term resolution which is expected to be presented.

The Third District convention recently defeated a resolution here requesting that President Roosevelt "give the lie" to "silly but persistent" rumors that he would seek a third term.

Other resolutions may be presented in connection with the reports of road fund diversion and poll tax committees appointed last year. Ray Doubles, dean of the University of Richmond Law School, will make the poll tax report, while Franklin Daniel, member of the House of Delegates, heads the road fund study group.

Locked in a struggle for president of the State clubs are John Duval, of Gloucester, and Robert Lane Anderson, of Marion.

Many of Virginia's leading senior Democrats are planning to listen in on the convention, including Senator Harry Byrd and at least six of the State's representatives.

The executive committee of the State clubs will meet at the John Marshall Hotel, convention headquarters, Thursday night and the first general session is set for 10 a. m. Friday, with an address of welcome by Col. John Cutchens, Richmond's director of public safety, and the keynote speech by Representative Dave E. Satterfield. Officers and convention committees will deliver their reports.

A boat ride down the James River has been arranged for the delegates Friday afternoon. District delegates will hold caucus sessions early Friday night with a dance following.

Committee meetings are set for Saturday morning, with the convention proper to reconvene at 1 p. m. Saturday when resolutions will be acted upon and officers elected.

C. O'Conor Goolrick, Fredericksburg attorney and former State Senator, will address the banquet session which will end the convention Saturday night. He will be introduced by Gov. Price.

Snow White Concocts Tomato Brew

The "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" will be the theme of the pageant to be presented at Berkeley Springs, W. Va., September 3 and 5 as the central part of entertainment in connection with the second Tomato Festival, it was announced yesterday. The story tells how "Snow White" (Miss Anna Mae Weber) has made a delicious brew (tomato juice, of course), and describes the elements that enter into the drink. In the photo she is shown with the "Seven Dwarfs."

Maryland Postoffice Clerks Again Elect Bowers President

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., Aug. 21.—The Maryland branch of the United National Association of Postoffice Clerks re-elected Leo M. Bowers, of Baltimore, as president at the closing session of its convention today.

A banquet tonight was the last event of the meeting.

Officers elected in addition to Bowers were:

Arthur F. Hightman, Brunswick, first vice president; Frank Russell, Hagerstown, second vice president; Hobart B. Albaugh, Frederick, treasurer; Murray Eiler, Hagerstown, secretary; Louis E. Strange, Annapolis, chairman of finance committee; Howard I. Reed, Chestertown, and J. W. Roney, Hagerstown, organizers.

Officers were installed by John J. Barrett, national president, who spoke on the benefits of the organization.

The association adopted a resolution opposing affiliation with any outside organization.

It also went on record as favoring a law requiring seniority in work assignments; favoring competitive examinations for promotion; favoring discontinuance of case examinations after 25 years' service or 60 years of age; favoring a 45-minute hour as a wage basis between 6 p. m. and 6 a. m., and approving a supervisor's pay for a clerk who does a supervisor's work for a day.

The dead:

Several suffered fractured limbs and scalp lacerations while the others escaped with minor injuries. They were en rout to a religious gathering.

Minter was riding with ten members of hs family yesterday on a small truck and was crushed to death when it crasned between Danville and Martinsville. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Minter, remained in a Danville hospital last night while the eight other riders were treated and released.

A truck also figured in the other fatality with Brock dying several hours after his automobile was in a collision early yesterday with a heavy vehicle. Two occupants of Brock's car were hurt. The accident occurred near St. Charles.

Famous Pulitzer Prize Stage Hit May Be Academy Award Film

'You Can't Take It With You,' Under Frank Capra's Direction, Gives Promise of High Hilarity; Thoughts on Penury Afloat; More of Auto Theater; Notes.

PERHAPS the reason that Frank Capra, Columbia's ace director and one of the most expert practitioners of his craft to be found anywhere in the motion picture industry, has such a distinguished list of screen hits to his credit is that he never dawdles away his time on inferior stories. Provided with a substantial narrative to begin with, Capra has a seemingly limitless capacity for building elaborated dramatic structures upon his sound story foundation. His art lies along the way of effective embellishment of important "story points" without emasculation of the original script.

BELL.

In such pictures as "It Happened One Night" and "Lost Horizon," for example, Capra succeeded in adding a wealth of effective touches to original works by distinguished authors without in the least impairing the integrity of their fictional creations. He seems to be doing the same thing with his celluloid version of "You Can't Take It With You," the Pulitzer Prize play, by George S. Kaufman and Moss Hart.

There has just come to this desk a handsome plate-paper brochure devoted to Mr. Capra's ministrations to a play that already has had a tremendous vogue on Broadway and on "the road," and from the pamphlet's voluminous illustrations it appears that this pungent comedy of the home life of the Vanderhof tribe will be a thing of magnified hilarity when it reaches the silver sheet. It had better be. Columbia paid a sum that roughly approximates the national debt for the screen rights to the play and you know what that national debt is!

Cognizant of Mr. Capra's extraordinary capabilities as a craftsman in celluloid, Columbia gives him very elegant tools to work with. Take the single matter of cast, for instance. What director could ask a more competent band of skilled artists to interpret his wishes than one comprised of James Stewart, Jean Arthur, Lionel Barrymore, Edward Arnold, Mischa Auer, Halliwell Hobbes, Donald Meek, Mary Forbes, Ann Miller, Spring Byington, Samuel Hinds and Dub Taylor, with Lillian Yarbo and Eddie Anderson to play the roles of the Vanderhof's unrestrained colored servitors? Mr. Capra ought to be able to get a pretty fair picture out of that bunch with nothing to begin on but a wish, let alone a Pultizer Prize winner!

The Columbia high command evidently thinks so, too, judging from the productional values they are pouring into this latest of their excursions into the field of rafter-rattling comedy. Those already familiar with the stage play will discover scenes in the picture of which they have never even dreamed. The fact that Robert Riskin made the screen adaptation of "You Can't Take It With You" won't hurt it any, either.

It would be quite an order to exceed the laughability of, say, "The Awful Truth," but it wouldn't be surprising to see Frank Capra fill it with this one.

When Mr. and Mrs. Arthur De Titta sailed aboard the Normandie last Wednesday for their new European post with Fox Movietone News, with headquarters in Paris, they were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Lew Lehr, of the same organization, and their daughter, who went along just for the ride and a bit of a vacation jaunt on the other side. The party, so one hears, was ensconced in one of the skiff's lesser steerage accommodations consisting of a suite of three twin-bed sleeping apartments, living room, with baby grand piano and a few other minor evidences of squalor; private dining room, overlooking the Atlantic's green lawn; individual electric kitchen and refrigeration plant and Roman baths about the size of modest swimming pools—all very poverty-stricken and uncomfortable, like a floating penthouse! Too bad it doesn't take the Normandie longer to get across. When she sailed, they say the De Tittas were waving goodby to friends on the dock with one hand and swabbing away tears with the other. But that was last Wednesday.

One reason the current edition of the "Going Native" revue, at Loew's Capitol Theater, seems better than its predecessors to some of us is that it goes in a little more for generalization and a little less for putting the finger on the individual subjects of its travesties.

Take that "Sleeping Beauty" finale, as a case in point. It merely pokes a little pointed fun at the five Washington newspapers. But what was it they did a year or so ago? I'll tell you what it was they did. They represented the five drama desks by a quintet of huge masks, that looked too much like their subjects, and got pretty personal in their fun—all in a nice way, of course. The underlying idea, no doubt, was that old business of "Would some power the giftie gie us, etc."

There was some practical merit in the gag, at that. My oversize, papier mache likeness was tucked away on a shelf in the basement, and there hasn't been a rat around the place since—except, of course, the original of the effigy.

Something was said here some time ago about the manner in which foreign-made pictures of the better sort have "caught on" out at Sidney B. Lust's Boro Theater, in Bethesda, Md., much to the surprise of Mr. Lust and all concerned. Not that European pictures aren't good pictures, but usually they are deemed inferior to Hollywood's by the laity. Not so at the Boro. So "Mayerling," costarring Charles Boyer and the fabulous Danielle Darrieux, will be presented for the third time to the Bethesdans on next Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, with "The Golem" and "Wedding Rehearsal," costarring Merle Oberon and Robert Young, to follow in due course. The theater's big parking lot with accommodations for an unheard of number of cars may have something to do with it.

* * * *

Speaking of parking lots, interesting sidelights on the operation of the new Mount Vernon, open air, automobile theater continue to bob up.

The other night, by way of illustration, a Florida Packard was parked on one of the ramps next to a motorcycle, by way of contrast. It turned out that the occupants of the Packard were regular patrons of one of E. M. Loew's motor car airdomes in Florida, glad to discover one of their favorite amusement places on a visit to Washington.

The first customer last Wednesday night was a baby Austin—probably in search of entertainment for little folks!

Wednesday night's driving downpour was the Mount Vernon's first actual rain test and in no way interrupted the presentation of the regular bill.

The advantage of free admission of children was demonstrated one night last week when a father drove in with his six offspring for the single adult charge of 35 cents. He explained that the wife was out playing bridge, and it devolved upon him to spend an inexpensive evening entertaining the youngsters.

With all of the capacity business since the opening of the theatrical innovation, no driver has encountered any difficulty in entering, parking or leaving the Mount Vernon and not a fender has been scratched.

So now you know.

Incidentally, the outlying attractions offered Capital theatergoers this week are as follows: The Olney, Eugenie Leontovitch in "Tovarich;" Roadside, Augustus Thomas' "Alabama;" Cross Roads, "The Vinegar Tree;" Mount Vernon, through Wednesday, "In Old Chicago," with "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" beginning Thursday and continuing through Saturday. All are stage presentations with the exception of the Mount Vernon's motion picture bills. The Olney and Cross Roads bookings are for one week only; the Roadside's, for a fortnight, in line with the usual policy at the "old red barn."

Trans-Lux

If ever there was a variety bill in the movies, it is at the Trans Lux Theater this week. There is everything from Charlie McCarthy to a beautiful travelog of picturesque Hongkong.

The always-popular news feature of this interesting panorama of entertainment runs the gamut of world activity—more of the Japanese drive on Hankow and the evacuation of the American Embassy in the same city; the President delivering his social security speech and Senator George and Representative O'Connor giving their opinions. Most interesting are shots of the midshipmen returning from the annual cruise, while Capt. Eyston shows his speed on the salt flats in Utah.

In the realm of sports there are the College All-Stars and the Washington Redskins going through their severe football practice, backed by fascinating shots of the international horse show at Dublin, Ireland. For those who go in for water sports there are some great pictures of the diving champions at Lake Mohawk, N. J.

Milady will be interested in the fall hat preview, while the kiddies will thrill at the soapbox derby at Akron, Ohio.

There is a great Sportlight, "Underwater," with Grantland Rice doing the describing, and another of those Walt Disney Silly Symphonies, this time titled "Musicland."

Last, but by no means least, is our old pal, Charlie McCarthy, in one of his very funniest, "Neeking Party." You will howl. And be sure to see Lew Lehr and his trained seal!

A Blonde Stick Of Dynamite Is Back in Films

Alice White, Former Star, Returns to Pictures With a New Philosophy.

By Frederick C. Othman.

Hollywood, Aug. 21 (U.P.).—Alice White, star of so many pictures she almost has lost count, looked back today on the not-so-good old days when her name was in lights all over the world and announced:

"I wouldn't be a movie star again for all the tea in China."

Eight years ago Miss White—remember her honey-colored hair and her big brown eyes?—was 19 years old and one of the leading stars on the Warner Brothers lot. She got 25,000 fan letters a month. Her picture was in all the movie magazines.

There were Alice White clubs throughout the country. She starred in such hits as "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," "Showgirl in Hollywood" and "Naughty Baby." Every time she went to a party with a young man, the columnists wrote about her new romance. The glamour that surrounded her started with a capital "G."

"And I earned $150 a week," she said. "I needed $1,500 to keep up my end of the parade. I was a star and I was paid like a bit player. And simply couldn't keep up the front that was necessary."

Argued About Money.

She got into an argument about money and—blooie!—Alice's name vanished from theater marquees. The girl who had become one of the biggest of all the stars in town in ten months flat faded from the Hollywood firmament in almost as many weeks.

"I got a few parts in pictures, of course," she said. "I played personal appearances in vaudeville. I worked on Broadway. I went to England and I nearly died of intestinal flu. I got married and I got divorced.

"I had a lot of experience and I guess it all helped to develop character, or whatever. Anyway, I'm working in pictures again, but you can believe me, if anybody wants to make me a star, I'll turn him down so quick he'll never know what hit him."

We bumped into Miss White at R-K-O, where she is playing in "Annabel Takes a Tour." She is 27 years old now, as blonde and as beautiful as ever, and as frank.

"Liberty and Freedom."

She is the girl, you may remember, who had her nose remodeled to make her look prettier. She made no secret of it, on the theory that it was legitimate business for an actress to look as attractive as possible.

Then when she got a divorce from Si Bartlett, after nearly four years of married life, she slipped a "divorce ring" on her finger. It was a small gold band, with the words "liberty and freedom" engraved upon it.

When Alice was 11 years old she weighed 132 pounds. Life for her has been a constant battle against weight, but by submitting to the pummeling of a masseur and avoiding chocolate cake, she manages to stay around 100 pounds.

"Fact is I used to be just a fat little girl," she said. "I went to Hollywood High School for a while, but I wanted more spending money. So I quit and got a job at Charlie Chaplin's studio as a script girl. I was so stubby and fat and pink-looking that everybody there called me 'Peter Rabbit.'

Future Still Ahead.

"I had no thought of becoming a movie actress. One day the still cameraman had a new lens he wanted to test and he said 'Peter Rabbit, how's to pose for me?' So I put on an act with gestures, like I thought movie actresses did, and he snapped the shutter. The pictures turned out fine. When Mr. Chaplin saw them he said 'Peter Rabbit, you ought to go into the movies.'

"So I had some movie tests made. I paid for 'em myself. An agent saw them, got my name on a contract, and first thing I knew I had offers from three studios. I went up fast, but I went down faster. Some folks claimed that was because I was too fresh a kid. Maybe I was. Maybe I wasn't. At least, I tried to stand up for my own rights.

"Anyway, life has been mostly fun. I like the movie business. It's a pleasure even when things are going bad. When they're going well, it's swell. And here I'm doing just what I was afraid of. I'm talking just like an old woman whose whole career is behind her. Most of mine—I hope—is still ahead."

In Hollywood

With HEDDA HOPPER

Hollywood, Aug. 21.—Remember Rex Ingram? He directed "The Four Horsemen" and discovered Rudolph Valentino. He's been living in Mexico, but is coming back to Hollywood to write a book called, "Matadores and Magdalens." Quite a hero down there. They dedicate bulls to him when he enters the arena.

HEDDA HOPPER

Rex never felt that he owed Hollywood a debt of thanks, for when he came back from the war, shot to pieces, the only job he could find was as prop man, and he worked 16 hours a day at that until his health failed. No money for a hospital. A woman over on Pinehurst road nursed him for more than a year. Then he went to work—and you know the rest.

When he returns next month, he's going back to live in the Pinehurst home. His wife, Alice Terry, will be with him.

At the close of the Deanna Durbin picture, Eddie Ludwig gave the 40 kids who worked with him a farewell dinner. Then, back at the studio, ran the picture they asked for—"Frankenstein."

While Mrs. Gene Towne was washing the ears of her little girl, the child spoke up and said, "Honestly, the way you're digging at my ears, you'd think there was gold in them."

Saw the Dick Barthelmesses dining their children—his daughter by Mary Hay and her son. They're not only adorable but distinguished. Both prospects for a talent scout, I'd say.

The last word in honest advertising. A huge sign on the empty house next door to Eddie Robinson, reads: "Perfect ten-room house—it can't last long."

Joan Bennett took the train to San Diego, caught the ferry to Coronado in her own car, then flew to Ensenada for week-end. Hope the beach was restful after that fatiguing journey.

Remember Gibson Gowland in "Greed?" After batting around the world for years on a tramp steamer, he's joined "Northwest Passage" for more travel.

Freddie Bartholomew is out to win a place on the all American football team, but the crew of "Listen, Darling" doesn't share his enthusiasm. One of them came out with a black eye the other day.

Gypsy Rose Lee has been taking a course in economics at UCLA. Now, Gypsy will hold for half an hour. From strip tease to economics is some step, even for Hollywood.

John Garfield, in "Four Daughters," reveals one of the most exciting personalities to hit the screen in a long time. He has a sinister futility that fascinates. He can rip the heart out of a scene as easily as we tear a herring apart.

Lana Turner discloses a figure worthy of a bathing suit ad in the Judge Hardy pictures. Came onto her in "Rich Man, Poor Girl." She should ride to glory in "Northwest Passage."

Jane Wyman, in "The Crowd Roars," is as cute a piece of femininity as these eyes have rested on in a long time.

Now it can be told about Gale Page, one of the "Four Daughters." She was a radio personality who wanted to crash the films so came out here two years ago to look us over. Her manager and friend took one look at her and said: "Go back to your Chicago job and take off 40 pounds, then return." She did, a year ago.

Watch these kids. They're on their way up and no foolin'. My friend, Tiny White, who sees hundreds of pictures, suggests Claire Trevor for Scarlett. She'd be good. Never thought of her for it.

Didn't expect so many replies to my question: "Should actors keep out of politics?" Half of them said Yes. Others condemned and were bitter about the whole thing. Anne K. wrote: "Your opinion is cockeyed. What you think regarding actors' actions is irrelevant, immaterial and slightly unimportant." Thanks, Anne, for "slightly."

M. F. writes: "I will jot down names of new dealers as fast as you can get them into print and shall rejoice over every one."

Thank you Joe Keith for the poetry. But wish you'd send me a copy of your poem which was engraved on Marie Dressler's casket.

Little

"The White Sister," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's splendid picturization of the romantic story by F. Marion Crawford, with Helen Hayes and Clark Gable in the costellar roles, was revived yesterday at the Little Theater as chief screen feature of the new week's bill.

There is little need at this time to recall the vividly picturesque story of Angela Chiaromonte, the little Italian girl who fell in love with a dashing officer of the Italian aviation service and took her vows as a nun upon news of his death at the front—only to learn later that he had survived, as had her love, and returned to marry her. Angela's renunciation of her troth, instead of the holy vows she had taken to the church, comprises one of the most poignant scenes ever caught by the cameras.

There are many richly spectacular scenes that contrast effectively with the pictures more serious and profoundly respectful episodes—the festival sequences and those depicting the solemn ceremonies attending the initiation of the novice into the Holy Order that is to be her life thenseforth, to name only two among the many that lend unusual substance and dramatic charm to a subject that elicited much enthusiastic comment upon the occasion of its original release five years ago.

Miss Hayes, recently voted America's foremost actress in a distinguished poll, and Clark Gable are admirably equipped to do full justice to their commanding roles. Theirs, however, is not the entire credit for the deep impression created by "The White Sister." Lewis S. Stone, the late Louise Closser Hale, May Robson, Edward Arnold and Alan Edwards are among the many others who lend this film a fine quality of enduring worth. The production, under the direction of Victor Fleming, is an imposing one. The screen play was authored by Donald Ogden Stewart, from the dramatization of the Crawford novel by Walter Hackett.

The usual short subjects complete the bill.

"Nazi Netmen, Routed by Australians in Davis Cup Play, Called Home."—For the first time in the annals of Davis Cup tennis, defeat comes under the heading of disgrace to flag and country. The home office in Berlin did not say that, of course, in its order to Henner Henkel and Georg von Metaxa to return to Germany at once, but the inference is plain enough.

POVICH.

In America, in England, France, Australia and the other countries which compete for the Davis Cup, defeat is properly lamented and forgotten, but in the new Germany it is regarded as a national catastrophe. The legend of Teuton superiority is part of the very fabric of Naziism and the inept cannot be tolerated lest the masses begin to have their suspicions.

The recall of the German tennis team immediately after the loss to the Australians and despite the fact that the United States Lawn Tennis Association had counted on the German players competing in the United States doubles and singles tournament, was in pretty poor taste, if you're asking me. When the German team came to America to meet the Australians, they came with the implied promise to compete in the American tournaments.

The action of the German Tennis Federation in ordering Henkel and von Metaxas home appears to be only added evidence that the Nazis can't take it. Remember what happened after Max Schmeling was knocked out by Joe Louis in June. The Nazis refused to permit films of the bout to be exhibited in Germany.

And remember what happened in the 1936 Olympics after Jesse Owens and other colored members of the American team ran away with the track events? There were dirty cracks in the German press about "America's black auxiliaries."

In the official order for the Germans to return home following the defeat at Brookline, the cable read: "Team requested to return home in order to be saved from too much tennis." But the cable arrived a couple of days late. It failed to save the Nazis from "too much tennis" by the Australians.

"War Admiral wins the Whitney Stakes at odds of 1 to 3."—The really interesting part of that headline is those figures. If there is any lingering doubt that Man o' War is still in a class by himself despite the sensational victories of War Admiral, those 1-to-3 odds ought to settle it.

War Admiral's pappy would never have been a 1-to-3 shot in a three-horse field as was War Admiral in the Whitney Stakes at Saratoga. Against tougher competition than his son met at Saratoga last Saturday, Man o' War often was quoted at 1 to 100 by the bookies.

War Admiral's stock took a sharp drop when he ran a poor fourth to Menow in the Massachussets Handicap and it suffered further a couple of weeks ago when the mare Esposa ran him to a head at Saratoga. But comparing him to his daddy is unfair to the Riddle 4-year-old. There is honor enough for War Admiral in the fact that he is the best horse in training on the American turf.

Only once since he struck his true form as a 2-year-old has War Admiral failed to cross under the wire the winer. That was in the Menow race at Suffolk when he obviously didn't like the off-track and was conceding weight to everything in the field. Since his 12-straight winning streak was interruptel in that race, he has won every race he has entered and would be the favorite to beat any horse in training.

One thing that was illustrated last Saturday at Saratoga was that the horse makes the rider. For the first time in his career, War Admiral was running without Charley Kurtsinger in the saddle, yet it made no difference. Wayne Wright was able to get him home without trouble.

The rider may not be able to make the horse, but the horse can most certainly make the rider. Sonny Workman was literally boosted into fame by Equipoise. Before he got the mount on the Whitney sensation, Workman was no sensation as a jockey. He was one of the run-of-the-mine riders. But he literally rode to fame on the sensational son of Pennant.

"Buck Newsom Registers Fifteenth Victory of Season in Defeating Tigers."—In many respects Buck Newson, cast off by the Nats and the Red Sox during the past 14 months, has the best record of any pitcher in the American League. Any fellow who can show 15 wins for the eighth-place Browns at this stage of the season must be considerable pitcher.

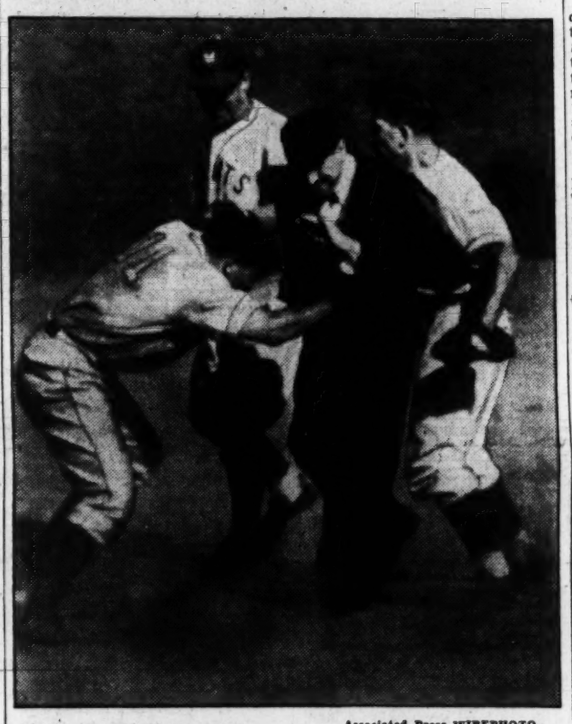
Red Ruffing is the only chucker in the league who can show more victories than Newsom. And Ruffing, pitching for the league-leading Yankees, can show only two more. If Newsom were backed by the Yankees' hitting and fielding, these isn't much doubt that by this time he would already be a 20-game winner.

There always was reason for belief that Newsom is a good pitcher despite his release by the Nats and the Red Sox. In his first season with the Browns—1934, when the Browns finished sixth—Newsom was the winner of 16 games. With Washington in 1936, he was a 17-game winner. With Los Angeles in the Coast League in 1933, he won 30 games in a season.

Conversely, Newsom in 1934 and 1935 gained a dubious honor. In those seasons he lost more games than any pitcher in the league. His success varies in direct proportion to the sleep he gets. When well rested and in possession of his fast ball, he is, as we were saying, considerable pitcher. The first manager who succeeds in throwing a halter over Newsom and breaking him to harness will be rewarded. Gabby Street apparently has come closet to performing that feat.

The Cause ....

The Effect ....



Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Zeke Bonura Hits Homer In Nightcap

(Picture on Page 15.)

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Boston, Aug. 21.—For the first time this season, the Nats today won a game in Boston. And then they promptly suffered a relapse, losing the second game of a double-header, 7 to 2.

In that first game they started a gallant ninth-inning rally to jolt the Red Sox out of a 3-2 lead and triumph, 5 to 4, behind the pitching of Honest Pete Appleton. But the shock of that victory, combined with the second-game pitching of Joe Heving, was too much.

Twenty-five thousand cruelly disappointed Boston fans saw the Nats come out from behind a 3-2 deficit in the ninth inning of the opener and rush three runs across the plate against young Jim Bagby. Young Bagby an inning before had replaced Jack Wilson in the box and had halted a Washington threat.

Red Sox Fall Apart.

But in the ninth, the Red Sox's defense collapsed after Case opened the inning by banging a two-bagger high off the leftfield wall near the foul line. On Buddy Lewis' attempted sacrifice, Bagby made a miserable fumble and Case scurried to third with Lewis reaching first safely. At this point, Al Simmons drove the tying run across with a sharp single into left.

But the Nats weren't through. Bonura lined out to Higgins, but Travis singled to left, scoring Lewis and putting Simmons on second. And when Vosmik fumbled Travis' hit on the pick-up, Simmons scampered to third and Travis to second. The runners held their bases while West grounded to Foxx but a bit later Bagby uncorked a wild pitch with Ferrell at bat and Simmons scored from third with the third run of the inning.

In that second game, the Nats lost despite the valiant efforts of Zeke Bonura, who swatted out half of the eight hits given up by Heving, whom the Red Sox recently reclaimed from the American Association. Bonura attempted in vain to inspire his mates by hitting a pair of singles and a two-bagger and then he sindle-handedly delivered the Nats from a shutout by banging a homer in the ninth inning with Buddy Lewis on base.

No-Hit Ball for "Krakky."

Harry Kelley, working with only two days' rest, surrendered the second game to the Red Sox when he allowed five runs in the first inning. He was succeeded by Krakauskas in the fifth. Krakky pitched no-hit ball from that point to the finish.

In the first game, Wilson was in complete command for six innings while the Red Sox were wrangling three runs out of Appleton to take a 3-0 lead. After Jimmy Foxx doubled to center in the first inning, Appleton wild-pitched him home from third with the first Boston run.

Appleton yielded another run in the second inning when Nonnenkamp doubled, went to third on a wild pitch, and scored on DeSautels' single. And in the sixth, Higgins doubled and Nonnenkamp singled to produce the third Boston run.

Zeke Bonura put the Nats back in the ball game in the seventh inning. Appleton started the proceedings with a single to left and Case contributed a single that put him on second. Lewis fouled out and Simmons flied out, with the rally appearing to die out. But the dangerous Bonura belted a 420-foot three-bagger against the wall in deep center scoring the two base-runners.

Fifteenth Homer for Bonura.

In the eighth, it appeared that the Nats might score the tying run after West opened the inning with a single to center. But Bagby replaced Wilson and Myer obligingly hit into a double play. But Bagby got his in the ninth and Pete Appleton limited the Red Sox to a futile run in their half of the inning.

The Nats went to a lot of trouble to accomplish nothing against Heving in the first inning of that second game. Case beat out a bunt and then went out trying to steal second. Simmons later walked and Bonura doubled down the left field line but after Travis was purposely walked to fill the bases, West's fly was taken for the third out by Vosmik, who backed up against the fence in left.

The Red Sox didn't dally with Kelley. They packed five hits into the first inning after Cramer walked and hopped into a 5-0 lead. Vosmik, Cronin, Higgins, Nonnenkamp and Peacock were the offenders.

From that point on it was virtually no contest, what with Heving permitting no liberties. And the Red Sox picked up a couple of more runs against Kelley before Krakauskas got the Washington pitching job in the fifth. The sidearming Heving pitched five-hit ball in the first eight innings and had a shutout in his possession until the ninth. Then Lewis beat out a bunt and Bonura belted his fifteenth homer over the left field wall. But it was all very futile.

Sam Baugh Explains Differences Between College and Pro Football

By "Slingin' Sammy" Baugh.

(Forward Passing Champion, National Football League.)

I don't have any special topic today, so I'm just going to ramble along about professional football and hope it is interesting.

Folks have often asked me what I think is the big difference between pro football and college football. Well, aside from that regular pay check, there are several important differences.

SAMMY BAUGH.

Fundamentally, of course, the game is the same. We use the same ball as the colleges and work with the same idea of outscoring the other fellows. But the pros go at it a bit differently, I think.

In the first place, the pros are more serious about this game of football than the college boys. That may sound surprising, but it's a fact. Folks get the idea that because the college boys play for the sheer love of the game, they put more into it than the pros. That isn't true.

Why, there isn't a college squad in the country that wouldn't yell murder if it were forced to train like the Washington Redskins, for example. For the past two weeks, we've been working out twice a day in temperatures that sometimes reached 100 degrees. And you don't hear a squawk. With the pros, this business of getting into shape is serious. If a pro isn't in condition, he doesn't play. And if he doesn't play, the chances are he won't draw that pay check long. If the college boy doesn't feel like training, well, he just doesn't feel like training, that's all.

The truest thing ever said about football is that a fellow has to like the game or he can't play it well. There are a lot of hard bumps to take and the fellow who doesn't find a certain kind of fun in taking the bumps can't play football. Only the fellow who played the game well in college can get a job with the pros. If he makes good with the pros, he's not only a good football player—he gets a great satisfaction out of playing the game.

There are a couple of players on the Washington Redskins—fellows who have been stars in the pro league for a long time—who are probably better amateurs at heart than most college players. I mean Ernie Pinckert in our backfield and Turk Edwards in our line. They are playing their eighth year with the Redskins and they are playing football simply because they like it. Actually, they are sacrificing income to play the pro game. Edwards has an interest in a gold mine in the State of Washington that pays him much more than he earns with the Redskins and Pinckert has a sporting goods business on the Coast that is far more profitable than his pro football.

I soon discovered that this pro game has come a long way in the past ten years. Before 1930, pro football was an uncertain kind of business. The fellows who were in it didn't know how long it would last. The championship didn't mean much and a couple of big stars on each club were being paid most all of the money. The other fellows on the team were just a supporting cast for the big names like Grange and Nevers and Friedman and Cagle.

There wasn't much incentive for the players to train seriously. The league was loosely organized and there was always some doubt whether the owners could pay off. Pro football wasn't really established.

But club owners now always meet the pay roll. And the league championship is worth trying for. A winning team means profits for the club owner and a better contract next year. The fellows with the big names have got to produce or they're out. They can't get by on their reputations any longer. Every player on the squad has a chance at that big money.

When that opening whistle blows, they do things a bit differently in the pro league. I thought I knew all about football when I was graduated from Texas Christian. But in the first two weeks with the pros I found out how little I knew. Especially about pass defense. That is important in the pro league.

The rule that permits the pros to pass from any point behind the line of scrimmage makes it tougher on the defense, especially if the defense has any first-year men fresh out of college. They haven't been used to watching for a pass thrown from within five yards of the line of scrimmage. And unless they anticipate that kind of pass they'll look like awful chumps. That was my hardest job in the pro league last season, I think—adjusting myself to the pros' superior pass defense.

Another thing about the pros. They don't trifle much with little men. Every so often on college teams you'll see some flashy little guys with plenty of speed running wild. You won't see much of that among the pros, if any. The pros want their backs fast, but they want 'em big, too.

Just the other day, Coach Ray Flaherty of the Redskins, was telling me about a game in Boston several years ago. Flaherty was playing with the New York Giants then and his team was meeting the Boston Club. Eddie Casey, the old Harvard star, was coaching Boston, and he tried a new kind of strategy.

Casey had the idea that a set of fast, pony backs could beat the Giants and he started four little men in the Boston backfield. They were supposed to run the big Giants ragged. The theory didn't work out. Against that little backfield, the Giants started throwing passes and intercepting passes and in three minutes they had four touchdowns against the Boston club. Mention pony backs to Casey now and you'll get a short answer. Pro football is not a game for the little man.

I'm rambling along here, talking about the differences between pro football and college football when, as a matter of fact, I promptly forget about most of those differences when the opening whistle blows. When that first kickoff is in the air, a fellow isn't concerned much whether he's playing for Alma Mater or Alma Mazuma. The main idea is to win that ball game.

Late Rallies Enable Indians And Chisox to Split Twin Bill

Chicago Takes Opener From Tribe, 4-3, and Cleveland Wins Nightcap, 3-2; Allen Routed.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Aug. 21.—Late rallies today decided both ends of a double-header by one-run margins as the Chicago White Sox took the opener, 4 to 3, and the Cleveland Indians eked out a nightcap decision, 3 to 2.

Blanked for seven innings, Chicago drove ohnny Allen from the mound with a four-run rally in the eighth inning of the first game while the defeat was chalked against Allen, a balk by Relief Pitcher Johnny Humphries sent the winning run across the plate.

The Tribe trailed, 1 to 2, going into the ninth inning of the second game, but a single by Jeff Heath drove in the tying run and he scored the winning marker on Hal Trosky's single. Denny Galehouse, who relieved Willis Hudlin, got credit for the win.

Yankee Swimmers Win in Germany

Berlin, Aug. 21 (U.P.)—America's touring swimmers barely won the two-day international meet from European competitors today, 38 to 36 points, after German performers surprisingly took four of today's six concluding events.

Seven thousand spectators braved drenching rain to cheer for the Europeans—particularly the Germans—as they rallied to chop down the 6-point advantage the Americans gained yesterday.

United States swimmers took the 800-meter relay beating the Europeans in 9:03.6 against 9:10 flat. The American quartet were Takahashi Hirose, Hawaii; Otto Jaretz and Paul Wolff, Chicago, and Ralph Flanagan, Miami, Fla.

Later Flanagan churned through the 1,500 meters in the fast time of 19:09.4 to capture the only other American victory, beating Bjoein Borg, of Sweden, Borg's time was 20:09.4.

Three Hurlers Shelled as Phils Make It Two in Row, 8-3.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 21.—The futile Phillies, who waited until yesterday to win their first game of the season at the Polo Grounds, made it two in a row today with an 8-to-3 victory over the slipping Giants.

They landed on Cliff Melton and two other pitchers for 15 hits, and, after piling up four runs in the first inning, coasted in behind the effective nine-hit pitching of big Max Butcher, who beat the Giants for the second time in eight days.

The game was featured by a fight between Shortstop Dick Bartell, of the Giants, and Catcher Bill Atwood, of the Phils. Atwood bumped into Bartell on the base-paths in the seventh, and they squared off until Umpire Beans Reardon broke it up.

Pink Whitney, with three hits, and Del Young, with two, each drove in three runs.

Detroit, Aug. 21.—Hank Greenberg hit his forty-second home run of the season today but the St. Louis Browns defeated the Detroit Tigers, 9 to 4, to end the Tigers' six-game winning streak.

Alton Benton started on the mound for the Tigers and pitched no-hit bal for five innings, but weakened in the sixth and was touched for two runs. A five-run rally in the eighth enabled the Browns to clinch the victory.

Buck Newsom went the distance for St. Louis and marked up his sixth consecutive victory. Harlond Clift outdid Greenberg, registering two homers and batting in four St. Louis runs.

Marlboro Assured Full Fields as 87 Trainers Bring Horses

The Punch Line...

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Now that dusky Henry Armstrong has accomplished the herculean task he set out to do one chill day last February, some doubt seems to have arisen in the minds of ring writers and fans alike concerning his purported invincibility. The boys are thinking back to the Ambers bout, mulling over it, and murmuring that Henry ain't exactly what they thought he was last winter, or as recently as last June.

ATCHISON.

It really is amazing to see the first man to hold three world championships simultaneously subjected to such a withering fire of uncomplimentary remarks. After all, it is quite a feat, and may not be duplicated again for innumerable generations—if ever. But the reaction to Armstrong's ordinary style of fighting was bound to come . . . He isn't a great fighter and never will be, all his titles to the contrary notwithstanding.

Ambers today might still have been the lightweight ruler—and welterweight ruler along with it, had he not unwisely elected to slug with Armstrong in the early rounds of their bout. It wasn't his customary style and his brashness cost him the fight and his crown. He fought right down Armstrong's alley and had to lose.

Henry Was Tired.

But here's Armstrong, hailed in some quarters as the greatest fighting machine his size of all time, beside whom Gans and Wolcott stand in pale insignificance, knocking down his opponent twice, and failing to keep him down. Here's Armstrong, the superman, tired, blood-smeared and bewildered at the finish. He didn't know he had won and what is more, he didn't care. He was sick at the stomach and sick of fighting—and sick of fighting Ambers in particular.

The reason is simple enough. Ambers merely fought his usual fight in the closing rounds. He fought along the same pattern that carried him to the pinnacle of success, and because he chose to abandon that style—ingrained in him, earlier in the fight, he lost.

Armstrong didn't impress this department as a killer, a great fighter—or even a good fighter the night he removed Barney Ross' crown from the Chicagoan's head. He looked and acted like a tough but ordinary club performe. He whipped a tired old man that night—a Ross who also failed to follow the plan of battle that carried him to the welterweight crown.

Sarron Was Weak.

The Petey Sarron whom Armstrong dropped for the featherweight crown was weakened making weight for the fight. His legs were gone—collapsed completely in the seventh round. Up until that point Sarron wasn't exactly holding his own, he was beating Henry at his own game of windmilling. Sarron will deny it, of course, but if the truth be known he quit to Armstrong that night. He knew it would be futile to continue with his legs gone and so made a hasty exit.

Give Sarron a return bout with Armstrong now—let 'em fight for the lightweight crown, where Petey will not be bothered or worried about weight, and he'll make the champion look like a five and dime store fighter. A good boxer with legs cannot only outpoint Armstrong 14 in 15 rounds, but if he possesses a fairly good punch—not a killing blow, he might put him away. Over the 15-round route, a steady tattoo of light blows are as effective as one good, solid poke on the whiskers.

Gets Hit Easily.

Armstrong gets hit too easily, and hasn't enough punch on his own account to atone for the lack of a defense. They're talking of putting him in against Ceferino Garcia, and if they do, the Filipino will be your next welterweight champion. All he has to do is step around in the first half-dozen rounds, jabbing, ducking and back-pedaling, then bring up the heavy artillery in the latter stages of the fight and Armstrong will think they have called out the National Guard.

Ambers never was held in high repute by the boys who write about fights and those who indulge in the pastime. They regarded him as something of a freak, hence when he stood up and tore down all prefight predictions in the Armstrong bout, when he came as close to winning as your next breath, it made the fight mob think twice about Armstrong's purported greatness. And, totaling everything, they discovered that he doesn't add up to as much as they first thought.

Or maybe this Ambers is something of a superman himself. It's an idea!

10-Day Meet To Open on Wednesday

Daily Double Changed to First and Second Races This Year.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Marlboro, Md., Aug. 21.—Eighty-seven trainers are tightening up their charges today, for the opening of the second lap of Maryland's fall racing season at 2 p. m. Wednesday.

Over at Bowie, 6 miles away, 18 more have thoroughbreds in training for the ten days' sport of the Southern Maryland Agricultural Association. Others are quartered at Pimlico, Laurel and Timonium, therefore Race Secretary Edward J. Brennan won't lack for thoroughbreds with which to make up his seven-race program daily.

Coming on the heels of the highly-successful ten-day sessions at Bel Air and Cumberland, the sport promises to be the best in the track's history. Every one of the 70 winners at Cumberland, occupies a stall here or is quartered at Bowie. They got in on the Baltimore & Ohio special, which arrived this morning.

During a trip around the grounds this morning, General Manager Joseph B. Boyle, Assistant Manager Alton S. Jump, Race Secretary Edward J. Brennan and Track Superintendent Dick Pending found the following trainers with thoroughbreds occupying stalls, J. Bowes Bond, Everett Brining, R. J. Cremen, John White, Harvey McHenry, W. S. Sweeney, Basil A. Hall, E. H. Gaines, Fay Headlee, C. P. Miles, jr., J. L. Garthright, Henry Clark, K. D. Kolseth, Jim Hill, Mike Grant and J. T. Engle.

W. O. Seigert, Charlie Beal, G. A. Cook, Tom Lewis, J. E. Simmons, Mike Johnson, Jack Bishop, H. Shenski, I. K. Mourar, Dick Westmoreland, R. B. Archer, C. H. Fitzgerald, A. H. Utterback, Len Carver, Claude Costello, A. S. Bowman, James Arthur, Rhodie Campbell, W. Hauhurst, Mose Simon, Claude Feltner, Charlie Feltner, O. F. Kent, M. J. Hanton, R. Jackson, S. B. Webb, Vernon Arthur and P. Paluch.

Wednesday's opening seven-race program is headed by the Upper Marlboro Purse. This is a 5½ furlong sprint, for 3-year-olds and upward. All fields will be limited to eight starters in order to insure cleaner racing.

Edward S. Welter who does such excellent work in the starter's stand, will again dispatch the fields from stationary stall gates.

In addition to the usual pari-mutual wagering, the daily double will be offered on each day's first and second races instead of the first and third as in previous years. Wagering will be in charge of Mort Mahony of Baltimore.

Pirates

double-header, 6 to 4 and 6 to 1.

The twin bill setback, Pittsburgh's first this year, reduced its lead to five games over New York's Giants, who lost a single game to Philadelphia.

Tex Carleton, going the route for the first time in several weeks, scored his ninth win in the second game by yielding only seven hits, all singles. Big Bill Lee won the opener, his fifteenth victory this season, with the help of three runs he batted in himself and a bit of dramatic ninth-inning rescue work by Jack Russell.

Lee held the Bucs to one run until the ninth. At this point a base on balls and hits by Arky Vaughan, Gus Suhr, Al Todd and Pinch-hitter Woody Jensen, drove in three runs and left the tying runs on base with two out. Russell then was rushed in. The former American Leaguer ended the game by striking out Bill Brubaker on three pitches.

Brubaker replaced Lee Handley in the seventh inning. The regular third baseman was banished for the rest of the day by Umpire Ziggy Sears because he grabbed the umpire's arm in an effort to continue a protest after Sears had started walking away. The dispute arose after Phil Cavarretta was ruled safe in stealing third.

Russ Bauers was the victim of his own wildness and gave up half the Cubs' 12 hits in the first four innings of the second game. Cavarretta, Bill Jurges and Lee each collected a single and double to lead the assault against Cy Blanton in the opener.

Andalusia Hurler Nears Strikeout Mark

Birmingham, Ala., Aug. 21 (AP).—Virgil (Fire) Trucks held a hatful of strikeout records today on 413 whiffings piled up while winning 25 and losing five games for Andalusia of the Alabama-Florida League.

The 19-year-old Detroit Tiger property fanned 15 last night while Andalusia trimmed Troy, 3-0. This shoved him two past the record at which he has been shooting, a 411 total made in 1884 by Charles (Hoss) Radbourne in Providence, R. I.

Investigation disclosed today Martin Kilroy struck out 505 for the Baltimore Athletic Association in 1886, but that record, like Radbourne's, was set when the pitcher stood only 50 feet from the plate, instead of 60½.

The husky youth ran up his 413 strikeouts in 267 1-3 innings and, although he has no chance to break Kilroy's mark between now and the end of the Alabama-Florida League season next Sunday, he is expected to boost his edge over any modern records.

Sandlot Pickups

After the Week-Day League city champions are crowned and the winning team is on its way to Pittsburgh to compete in the National Amateur Baseball Federation tournament, which opens on September 10, there will be with the local aggregation a man who is beloved by millions as one of the immortals of baseball . . . For Walter Perry Johnson has been given a free invitation to attend the tourney by Mayor Cornelius Scully, of Pittsburgh . . . Walter will also be the acting manager and coach of the local lads.

• • • •

Incidentally, the double knockout series between the six week-day leagues gets underway today and will continue for about two weeks . . . The club that loses two is automatically eliminated . . . The six leagues, one of which will have an opportunity to have Johnson as their manager and coach, are: Herald Malitia Departmental, Commercial, Industrial, United States Government and Herald Government . . . Last year, Pepco won the city crown . . . Johnson will toss the first ball today to inaugurate series play assisted by Wash. B. Williams, treasurer of the National Capital Baseball Federation . . . The two leagues selected to begin action are the Herald-Malitia and Departmental.

• • • •

Undefeated Columbian Leaguers: The Chevy Chase Cardinals, who defeated the Deoudes Celery nine, 6 to 5, yesterday has not lost a Columbian League game . . . Maloney, leftfielder; D. Lynham, third baseman; F. Wideman, rightfielder; B. McGhee, pitcher, and J. Stevens, leftfielder.

• • • •

Hurling highlights: Flinger Domnell, of the Park Lane nine, struck out 20 of the opposition as his team nosed out the Lacey Athletic Club in the first game of a double-header by the score of 7 to 6 . . . Team records: Snug Harbor, a team you have been reading about quite often during the past Monday mornings, has lost only six games in 34 starts.

Army, Navy Club Golfers Trounce Indian Spring; Woodmont Wins

Ralph Bogart's 70 Is Course Record

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

A forty-four man golf team of the Army and Navy Club dealt an unexpected and decisive beating to the invading Indian Spring members yesterday, 38 to 28, as Ralph Bogart, Service Club junior star, set a new course record with a 70 in the feature round.

The winners thus gained revenge for a defeat suffered two weeks ago at Indian Spring. The visitors top duo of Amateurs Roger Peacock and Russ Hollenbaugh won 3 points from Professionals Danny Burton and Commander E. K. Patton, of the hosts, but other than this match only two of the invaders twosomes were able to sweep all three Nassau points.

Young Bogart, playing with Lieut. Lynch, split 3 points with Jerry Hart and Jock Olmstd, of the Four Corners Club, as Hart had an individual round of 73, includingg a two-under par back nine of 35.

Bogart's round was the first under 72 since the course was revised into one of the toughest in this section last spring. Ralph, protoge of Allan Burton, was out in 32, three under perfect figures, and back in 38 for the 70. Dr. A. H. Yando, of the hosts had a 75, third best score of the day, and, with his partner, G. Heiss, won 3 points from O'Malley and Harry Peacock.

WOODMONT.

Woodmont's golf team, trailing by 11 points in the annual competition with Suburban preceding yesterday's match, defeated the Baltimoreans, 20 to 4, at Woodmont and won the annual trophy with a 29½-point total to the visitors 24½.

The local team swept all 3 points in five of the eight foursomes and garnered at least an even break in the others.

Club Champion Milton Harris and the Many-Time Champion Howard Nordlinger set the hosts off on the rigght foot by winning three ways from Bobby Goldman and Nathan Haufman, sr., of the visitors.

MANOR.

The two-man team championship at Manor is apparently going to remain in the hands of Defending Champions Tom Corwin and Walter Talkes, as the young duo really let out yesterday in defeating J. E. Hughes and J. E. Maddox by a 7-to-5 margin in a quarter-final encounter.

The longg-tall pair of J. C. Putnam and J. W. Harvey won easily over District Junior Champion Dick Meyer and Burke Edwards in a mild upset, 4 and 3. They meet J. S. McBride and George Jones in a semifinal match next week, while the champions face H. J. Abbott and Ray Smith.

H. J. Abbott and Ray Smith defeated G. B. Messing and H. J. Shea, 2 and 1; Walter Talkes and Tom Corwin defeated J. E. Hughes and J. T. Maddox, 7 and 5; J. W. Harvey and J. C. Putnam defeated Burke Edwards and Dick Meyer, 4 and 3; J. S. McBryde and George Jones defeated Sam Andrews and James Benifer, 1 up.

Dave Thomson, Manor Club president, recently returned from a trip abroad, where he played the famed St. Andrews Course in Scotland and had the 70-year-old caddie that toted for Bobby Jones when the Atlantan won the British Open with a final round of 66.

W. C. Goodman, a low 80-shooter over the Norbeck layout, was pretty well disgusted with the game and things in general as he left the woods nine yesterday, after taking 50 blows. But he felt just the opposite as he cracked out a one over par 36 coming back, for an 86—the hard way. Guy Ives, J. E. Hasburg and W. E. Stogers witnessed the round.

KENWOOD.

Busey Moward, Charles Vaile and Tom Fitzgerald advanced to the semifinal in the top flight of the George Diffenbaugh tournament at Kenwood, while M. P. Canby and John Bergelin will have to play off their deadlock for the fourth berth in next Saturday's rounds.

Elite Giants Divide Pair

Crawfords Drop First Game, Win Second.

The Baltimore Elite Giants and Gus Greenlee's Pittsburgh Crawfords split a double-header at Griffith Stadium yesterday, the Elites taking the first game by the one-sided count of 18-1, while "Stud" Morris, striking out 13 of the Oriole heavy hitters in the nightcap, claimed a 5-2 victory over Bill Byrd.

"Schoolboy" Griffith, hurling for the Elites in the opener, held the Crawfords to two hits, while the Baltimoreans were amassing 20 off Harvey and Matlock for a runaway.

The crowd greeted Morris with salvos of applause in the second game when he came to the plate in the seventh, in realization that the scheduled seven-inning game would already have been won, had not Wilson's errors at second sent the teams into extra innings.

Chet Williams opened hostilities in the final inning with a triple off Byrd, reaching home on Camponelli's wild toss to the plate. Singles by Hariston and Harry Williams, and a double gy Giles to centerfield, accounted for the other scoring.

Americans Score Easy Track Victory.

By the Associated Press.

Budapest, Aug. 21.—Miklos Szabo, Hungary's European distance running champion, collapsed after 3,000 meters of the 5,000-meter run today and thus allowed an American track team to gain easy victories in all but one of the events in an informal meet against Hungarian rivals.

Szabo was expected to win or at least to give Greg Rice, of Notre Dame, a close race, but after he dropped out Rice went on to win the 5,000 easily in 14 minutes, 52.4 seconds.

Bill Watson, University of Michigan all-around star, failed to place in the discus throw for the only American defeat. He won the broad jump, however, with a leap of 24 feet 6½ inches. Watson also took the shotput with a toss of 50 feet 10¼ inches.

Mozel Ellerbe, of Tuskegee, was another double winner, taking the 100-meter dash in 10.6 seconds and the 200 meters in 21.7. Fred Wolcott, of Rice, took the 110-meter high hurdles in 14.5 and his teammate, Jack Patterson, won the 400-meter hurdles in 52.8. Charley Beetham, of Columbus, Ohio, took the 800-meter run in 5:24.2. Harley Howells, of Ohio State, won the 400 meters in 47.8.

Prince George's Wins.

The Prince Georges Athletic Club moved a notch higher in the race for the county title by trouncing Riverdale, 14-3, yesterday at McGruder Park. Coakley struck out 12 and gave up only five hits, while Edwards and Johnson were collecting three hits in five times at bat to lead the winners' attack.

Man of the Month

By Arch McDonald.

(WJSV-Wheaties Baseball Commentator.)

Each day, Arch McDonald distributes 10 points among the Nats whose play was most helpful to the Washington Club. At the end of each month The Washington Post will award to the leading player a gift in token of the honor of being The Post-Wheaties "Man of the Month."

The irrepressible Zeke Bonura, still rampant on his hitting spree, yesterday continued to make a runaway of the race for Man of the Month honors by starring in both games of the double bill at Boston. The 20 points awarded on the basis of the Nats' performance in those games were distributed as follows:

To Bonura, seven points, because in the first game his three-bagger scoring two mates put the Nats in the ball game in the seventh inning, and because in the second game he made half of the Nats' eight hits including a two-run homer that saved the team from a shutout in the ninth.

To Pete Appleton, four points, because he did a clever job in beating the Red Sox in the first game and because he contributed an important single to the Nats' seventh-inning rally.

To Joe Krakauskas, four points, because he pitched no-hit ball in the second game after relieving Kelley in the fifth inning.

To Sammy West, one point, because he contributed three singles in the first game.

To Al Simmons, one point, because his hit in the ninth drove over the tying run in the first game.

To George Case, one point, because he made two important hits in the late innings of the first game.

To Buddy Lewis, one point, because in the second game he beat out a bunt and was on base when Bonura hit his home run.

To Cecil Travis, one point, because in the first game he contributed a single that drove across an important run in the ninth.

The Score:

Zeke Bonura	39	Buddy Lewis	9
Buddy Myer	20	Taft Wright	8
George Case	18	Ossie Bluege	8
Cecil Travis	17	Sammy West	8
Harry Kelley	16	Ken Chase	7
Al Simmons	15	Angelo Giuliani	5
Dutch Leonard	13	Pete Appleton	4
Joe Krakauskas	11	Elon Hogsett	2

'Skins Find 2 New Stars In Exhibition

Tuckey, Bradley Shine as 3,500 Watch Intra-squad Contest.

By Jack Munhall.

The oft-repeated question "Who's going to fill Cliff Battles' shoes?" was all but conclusively answered yesterday as Dick Tuckey, a heretofore obscure fullback from Manhattan, led the Baker Braves to a 13-0 victory over Flaherty's Redskins in an intra-squad game at Ballston.

Tuckey's answer was in the form of a 38-yard touchdown pass in the second quarter and a great exhibition of both broken field running and line smashing. The answer was joyfully reverberated by 3,500 fans who overflowed the field to watch football return in August.

And these 3,500 fans also saw another star born in the person of Hal Bradley, a rookie end, late of Elon College. It was Bradley, a youngster of Charley Malone's lean, long build, who caught Tuckey's bullet heave and raced an additional 10 yards for the first touchdown. And it was Bradley, too, who was responsible for the second and final touchdown.

Intercepts a Pass.

In the third quarter just when the Redskins were threatening, Bradley leaped high to intercept a pass from George (Automatic) Karamatic on his own 42, eluded several tackles on the 15 and then lateraled to Vic Carroll, who crossed the goal line.

They were quite a pair, this Tuckey and Bradley. Competing with the Baughs, the Edwardses and the Riley Smiths, they were outstanding. True, Edwards played a yeoman defensive game; Smith was a moving factor in whatever offensive the 'Skins were able to show and Baugh in the brief time he was allowed to show his wares lived up to expectations. But when points were needed, it was Tuckey and Bradley who got 'em.

The game as an exhibition of football was sloppy at its best. The blocking, especially by the Flaherty outfit, was spotty and the tackling little better.

Coach Is Satisfied.

Coach Flaherty, however, was satisfied with his squad's first game efforts though he admitted there were a lot of rough places to be ironed before the All-Star game in Chicago, August 31.

Karamatic, the Gonzaga back, who had been so highly touted as another Battles, was something of a disappointment although it appeared the boys went out of their way to bottle him. He lost almost as much ground on running plays as he gained. His kicking, however, was excellent and his defensive play adequate.

Baugh played only about a quarter in the first half and completed 4 of 6 passes for a total gain of 32 yards. He kicked well and made several short gains.

Other backs to show up well were Hartmann, Georgia; Elder, Kansas State, and Max Krause, the veteran from Gonzaga. Jay Turner, the George Washington boy, started at quarterback for the Braves and turned in a creditable game. He did no ball carrying but ran his eleven well.

Following the game, Flaherty announced waivers had been asked on five players, among them two local boys, Joe Anthonavage, Catholic University guard, and Pat Brady, Georgetown tackle.

Others to be released are Russell Martin, New Hampshire U. guard; Irwin Gilbreath, University of Taxas halfback, and Al Mastron, Elon College guard.

He allowed only ten hits in the 17 innings he worked, the second game being limited to seven frames. He did not walk a batsman.

Kleins Tavern Nine Retains National City League A Lead

Rose Diamonders Trounce Union Printers, Move Into 2d Place; Coffey, Plumber Nines Win Titles.

Behind the steady mound work of Billy Liggett, who kept the seven enemy hits well scattered, Klein's Tavern remained in the lead for the National City League A title by trouncing the No. 4 Police Boy's Club nine, 8 to 1, yesterday on the East Ellipse. It was Klein's fourth victory in as many starts.

Charle Booker gave up five hits as Rose Liquor walloped Union Printers, 10-1, to move into second place. Pete Chaconas, who smashed three hits in six times at bat, a homer and double included, and Bill Bryant, who collected three hits in four attempts, two of which were doubles, were the slugging stars for the Rose lads.

In the other League A scheduled game, Fairfax Farm's Dairy took a 9-0 forfeit from Market Pharmacy.

The District Plumbers clinched the second half League B championship by downing Atlantic and Pacific, 18-2, for its seventh consecutive win. The Plumbers will meet Read's Pharmacy, first half winner, in a double-header next Sunday in an effort to determine the league championship.

Anacostia Motors defeated Tucci Plumbing, 6-3, and Read's Pharmacy, with Wainright leading the attack, stopped Girardians, 10-7, in other League B engagements. Wainright got four hits in six appearances at the plate.

Dicky Rozelle's relief hurling, in which he struck out two men with the bases loaded in the seventh and final frame, gave Coffey Screen the first half National City junior crown. They defeated the No. 10 Police Boys, 6-4.

Jack Redinger, in addition to being the winning hurler, got three hits in three attempts as his club—Deoudes Celery—nosed out Nick Bombard, 6-5. In another junior tussle, Bethesda stopped the No. 5 Police Boys, 6-2. Morell pitched four-hit ball for the winners.

With Rdaos, Perlo and Kendall leading the offensive, Blue Ribbon moved a step nearer the National City Midget title by beating No. 11 Police, 11-4.

Berle's Blast Raps Theories Of Brain Trust

New Assistant Secretary of State Treads on Administration Toes.

By Edward H. Collins.
A Special Correspondent.

New York, Aug. 21.—It is a rather unflattering commentary on our times that a member of the Administration can create something of a sensation by the simple process of stating what he thinks should and should not be done about business and industry, and doing so without any particular effort to accommodate his views to those of his official associates. Yet that is what happened last week when a private memorandum prepared by A. A. Berle, jr., the erudite and forthright young Assistant Secretary of State, became public property.

There is no question that Mr. Berle in his deposition—which was not offered voluntarily, but was prepared at the request of the members of the committee—dismisses with scant ceremony a number of preconceptions cherished by his fellow members of the brain trust. He observes, for example, that most of the talk about monopoly is nonsense—that small business may be monopolistic as well as big business; that there is no particular reason for assuming that small business is necessarily any more "humane" than big business; and that the phenomenon of inflexible "administered" prices, recently "discovered" by such intrepid economic explorers as Gardiner C. Means, Solicitor General; Robert H. Jackson and Leon Henderson, has been with us from time immemorial.

Eccles and Jones.

Other members of the Administration or associates on whose toes Mr. Berle ruthlessly treads are Herman Oliphant, Marriner S. Eccles, Jesse Jones and even Senator O'Mahoney, chairman of the monopoly committee, himself. Mr. Berle thinks Mr. Oliphant's undistributed profits tax subsidizes monopoly; he thinks that a capital credit bank, for small industrial loans, which has been opposed by Mr. Eccles and Mr. Jones, is a very much needed addition to the financial markets, and while he feels that Senator O'Mahoney's licensing bill for corporations has much to commend it he also thinks it has great potentialities for danger.

But all Mr. Berle's toe trampling and postling is entirely impersonal, and it is not at all confined to New Dealers. "Orthodox" economists and conservatives will find his suggestions by no means entirely comforting. There is a place for competition, Mr. Berle believes, for example, but there are also areas where conditions call for cartelization, or for Government regulation, or even for Government ownership and "direct production." As a matter of fact, he believes that "in another ten years we shall be forced into a vast expansion of direct production" and that . . . "the Tennessee Valley Authority may very well prove to be the great example."

Nonpolitical.

Whether one agrees with all that Mr. Berle has to say in his "memorandum of suggestions" to the monopoly investigating committee or whether one does not, the paper commends itself as a document of genuinely outstanding importance. It is authoritative, it is entirely open-minded and it is without the slightest tinge of politics. In the light of these circumstances, and in the light of the fact that, aside from its obvious news implications, it is still a private memorandum, the present writer has attempted, below, to give as much of the substance of its 12,000 words as is possible in a limited space. Here are some of the highlights as they appear to him.

General Objectives.

The investigation of business organization and practices should be essentially a search to find an organization of business that actually works. The economic organization may be roughly tested by the manner in which it answers these questions:

1. Does it provide an adequate supply of goods, as tsted by the normal market? As tested by apparent need?

2. Does it provide a maximum of people with an opportunity to make a living—"a living" being conceived as a condition under which people can live, maintain families, expect to continue in the economic system, and end this side of the relief line or the poor house?

3. Does it accomplish this process with due regard for the liberty and self-development of the individual?

All previous investigations have commenced with a set of preconceptions. There is reason to believe the present investigation may be in danger of doing the same thing. Small business and competition.

There is a tendency to idealize the early Nineteenth century and to assume that small business and the prices it charged were the result of competition. There is little foundation for this. The village blacksmith, the village grocery store and the village grist mill were all monopolies. Until the advent of the automobile they all charged conventional, or "administered," prices.

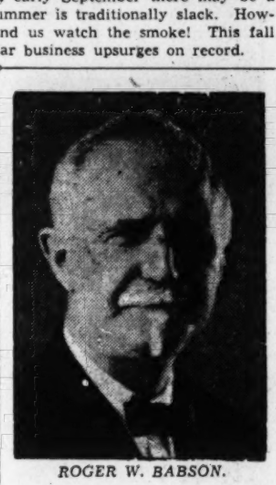
Present Sharp Business Rise Is Healthy, Babson Declares

August Industrial Indices Confirm the Upturn, He Says, With Possibility of a Pause in September.

By Roger W. Babson.

Babson Park, Mass., Aug. 21.—Business is continuing its sharp and healthy improvement. For August it is driving along 10 per cent above the low level of the recession. Every industrial signpost and barometer confirms this gain. From now until early September there may be a "waiting" period. The end of the summer is traditionally slack. However, when we put Labor Day behind us watch the smoke! This fall should see one of the most spectacular business upsurges on record.

Yet, in the face of the vigorous jump we have already had, 75 per cent of the people with whom I talk are still groaning about the recession. They say they are sitting tight to see whether this is "just a flash in the pan or a genuine recovery." Not until prices are skyhigh, orders rushing in and raw materials and good workers scarce will they finally become optimistic.



ROGER W. BABSON.

Hot Dogs and Education.

The situation reminds me of the story my friend George Trundle, jr., tells. It is about a man who lived by the side of the road and sold hot dogs. Here it is in his own words:

"The hot-dog man was hard of hearing, so he had no radio. He had trouble with his eyes, so he read no newspapers. But he sold good hot dogs. He put up advertising signs. He stood by the side of the road and cried, 'Buy a hot dog, mister?' And people bought. He had to increase his meat and bun order. He had to buy a bigger stove to take care of his trade. He finally got his son home from college to help him.

"But then something happened. His son said, 'Fahter, haven't you been listening to the radio? Haven't you been reading the newspapers? There's a big depression on. The European situation is terrible. The domestic situation is worse. Every thing's going to pot.' Whereupon the father thought, 'Well my son's been to college, he reads the papers and he listens to the radio, and he ought to know.'

"So the father cut down on his meat and bun orders, began to talk depression, took down his advertising signs, and no longer bothered to stand out on the highway to sell his hot dogs. And his hot dog sales fell off almost overnight. 'You're right, son,' the father said to his boy. 'We certainly are in the middle of a great depression.'"

Ups and Downs Sharper.

This little story not only illustrates the point about today's pessimists, but it also has a deeper moral. For 35 years I have been studying business statistics. I have a big Babsonchart hanging on the wall which covers all those years. Whenever I look at this business chart, I am amazed by the violent changes in the line which pictures the good and bad times of business. This "curve" has gone up and down more in the last ten years than in the three previous decades!

This fact is especially disappointing to me. When I started on my career of gathering data about business, I had a typical youngster's idea that I was embarking on a crusade—a crusade to help educate people about the business cycle. With such education I believed that the "curve" would smooth out. I thought the peaks would gradually become lower and valleys shallower. But the opposite has happened. The zig-zags are now more pointed and come more often than ever before.

Sensational News.

What are the reasons? There are many. I believe that the major ones, however, are the greater public interest in the business cycle and the new role government is playing in business. The cherished hope of my early days (that the more knowledge the public had of the business cycle the less severe the cycle would be) has worked in reverse. What happens is that people try "to beat" the cycle. Business news now gets far more attention than it ever did. Furthermore, such news is handled much more sensationally—especially by radio commentators. The result is that business today is ruled by emotions rather than by statistics.

Here is how it works. Some morning the public wakes up to the fact that the business outlook temporarily is uncertain. Activity slacks off and securities are quietly sold. News of this uncertainty begins to appear. People are fearful that they are on the brink of a depression. Suddenly the crowd stampedes. They rush to sell securities, to get rid of commodities, to cancel orders, and to lay off workers. Gloomy news fills the headlines and the air-waves. From good times, the country is plunged into recession almost overnight.

Mob Psychology.

After the necessary adjustments are made, the pendulum swings back again. Business gets better and securities rise. News of this gradually appears. The public begins to think a boom lies ahead and they will be caught flatfooted by rising prices and empty shelves. Suddenly confidence returns and the scramble for goods and securities is on. Bullish news fills the papers. The radio commentators dress it up sensationally. Then we have another feverish boomlet.

Hence, it seems to me that business is being run on mob psychology. Moreover, this up-and-down trend is accented by the new governmental control of business. The President comments favorably or unfavorably on the business outlook. In 15 minutes his remarks have reached every hamlet and farm. The effect is tremendous! So I think these are the reasons why the ups-and-downs of business are much sharper than they were 30 years ago.

Statistics.

To go back to Mr. Trundle's story, however, there is still one more thought. If business continually increased its meat and bun orders, irrespective of what statistics showed, we would soon be in hot water. People can eat only so many hot dogs. Inventories can get so big that they can ruin business. Periods of adjustment are necessary to keep business alive. Just as there would be no human race if we did not get indigestion when we eat too much, so our present business system would have died long ago if we did not have periods of reaction.

But now the 1937-38 reaction is fast passing. The Babson chart is only 19 per cent below normal today compared with 28 per cent under normal eight weeks ago. The pain is gone. It is time to stop moaning about it. Start doing business now. Do not delay until conditions are booming, prices skyhigh and another reaction just around the corner. Remember, those who wait to get the proof seldom get the profit!

Ham Dividend.

Chicago, Aug. 21.—Stockholders of Wilson & Co. recently received a "deviled ham" dividend. Three-ounce tins of deviled ham were mailed to security holders as a step toward seeking their co-operation in pushing the company's product.

Steel Activity Creeps Upward To 41.5 Per Cent

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, Aug. 21.—Receiving its principal support from miscellaneous buyers and from structural shape and plate work, activity in steel markets is holding recent gains, the magizine Steel said today.

Additional improvement is slight in contrast to the sharp July rise, but production has edged up 1½ points, to 41½ per cent. Prospects are favorable also for better business in some directions next month.

Plates, shapes and reinforcing bars made a relatively better showing than most other products, and their outlook was enhanced by the large number of public projects now pending.

Auto Expectations.

Automobile production, still restricted by model changing, is expected to account for heavier shipments of steel next month. Automotive steel buying for 1939 models so far has been light.

Steel operations thus far in August have risen somewhat more rapidly than expected on the basis of the usual seasonal trend for this month. The automotive industry is expected to be the principal factor in determining the extent of gains later this year.

An encouraging volume of building and heavy construction work is active, and recent orders for fabricated steel have been the heaviest in many weeks.

With the steel industry yet to move into the zone of profitable operations, speculation continues regarding possible revisions in wages and prices in order to alleviate losses. Consumers generally are satisfied that increases in quotations are unlikely for the balance of the year and continue to place orders in line with current needs.

Lumber Output Highest for Year

The lumber industry during the week ended August 13 stood at 66 per cent of the 1929 weekly average of production and 67 per cent of average 1929 shipments. Production was about 64 per cent of the corresponding week of 1929: shipments, about 72 per cent of that week's shipments; new orders about 69 per cent that week's orders, according to reports to the National Lumber Manufacturers Association from regional associations covering the operations of important softwood and hardwood mills.

Reported production in the week ended August 13, continued to increase and was the highest of the year to date. Shipments again dropped slightly below from the preceding week. New orders were lower than any time during the preceding six weeks, which, however, included the peak weeks for the past 12 months.

Freight Car Orders At Peak for Year

Class I railroads on August 1 had more new freight cars on order than at any time so far this year, the Association of American Railroads announced yesterday. The number of new freight cars on August 1 totaled 10,234 compared with 5,021 on July 1 this year. New freight cars on order on August 1 last year totaled 38,089 and on August 1, 1936, there were 27,151.

New steam locomotives on August 1 totaled 26, compared with 37 on July 1 this year and 283 on August 1, 1937. New steam locomotives on order on August 1, 1936, totaled 65. New electric and Diesel locomotives on order on August 1 this year totaled 23 compared with 26 on July 1 this year and 29 on Augustt 1, 1937. Two years ago there were 20 on order.

Am. Smelting Net $1.53 on Common

New York, Aug. 21 (AP).—American Smelting & Refining Co., and subsidiaries, reported today consolidated net profit after all charges for six months ended June 30 of $5,112,668, or $1.53 per common share, after preferred dividend requirements, compared with $9,24,997 or $3.38 per common share, for the first half of 1937.

News of Capital Night Clubs

By Mary Harris.

Not to jump the night-spot news too fast, frequent and far ahead, but next Monday (one week from today) Mayfair will reblossom with those standard Washington favorites, Leo Lisee and Jack Campbell. Leo will be a-singing, Jack a-piano-ing, in the smooth but dynamic style that has made them ace entertainment attractions.

Peter Borras, redoubtable and cultured host of the Madrillon, requotes to your correspondent his Spanish proverb, "The veil of modesty should be transparent," with the thought that your Post night spot column is regularly bringing to you the first, freshest, completest news of after-dark diversion in our town.

Shoreham Terrace snapshots: Senor Andres Pastoriza, Minister from Santo Domingo; Senor Roberto G. de Mendoza, first secretary of the Cuban Embassy—both doing those mad "Flat Foot Floogie" calisthenics invented by Barnee—but with Latin subtleties. Harry Stockwell (voice of "Prince Charming" at the Earle Theater last week) dancing like a Prince Charming.

The new Terrace show, to be unveiled this evening, will include dancers Cansino and Charline, a drove of the cunning Woolford dachshunds, other acts, too.

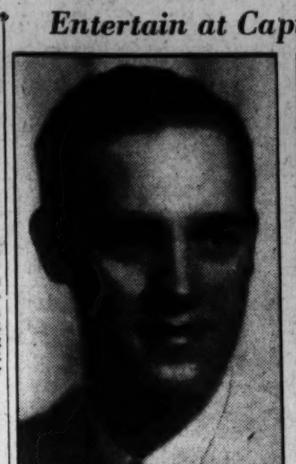
Yesterday the Rainbow Room Orchestra (minus non-golfing violinist Durward Bowersox) played a fast 18 holes against the Hotel Chamberlin (Old Point Comfort) foursome headed by pro-golfer Al Houghton. If all goes well, this column will be headed shortly by a pic of the Rainbow Room boys grouped around the Chamberlin Cup. If not, drop by the Rainbow Room and give them your condolences. Anyway, we'll bet that the Rainbow lads were winners at the big party scheduled on Chamberlin's Marine Roof last night. Sorry we couldn't make it.

Al Norton is going to stage his own revue at the Lotus this week. It will be headed by the Reeve Sisters who, says Al, "sing like the Pickens Sisters, act like the Marx Brothers." There will be other novelty and comedy acts. Something tells us this going to be too, too dee-vine.

Jerry Jumkin, as prophesied (50 per cent) in this column, won the Powhatan talen contest on Friday evening and will enjoy his prize-winner's Manhattan week-end over Labor Day.

Tip. And a good one. A star singer from one of New York's most famous spots will probably be the featured attraction in Powhatan's new cocktail lounge when it open late in September.

Entertain at Capital Night Clubs



BOB CALLAHAN, novelty pianist in Steve Le Sieuer's Powhatan Roof Orchestra. He's well known on the radio.

BURR McMULLEN, new singer-saxaphonist in Johnny Slaughter's Metronome Room orchestra.

Johnny Barnes stays on at Bamboo Gardens, but, of course. This week he'll do a dance in retarded tempo swing, also some fascinating stepping without music—this last is al fresco, or do we mean impromptu. Anyway, it'll be different every time you see it. Vantriloquist Julius Horne, a verra funny fellow, is also a holdover. New will be Winnie Waikiki. Yeah, she wearns a grass skirt, and we're told she shakes it so strenuously she has to buy a new one every day.

Comes a card from Oscar of the Hi-Hat, who says he's traveling by horse and buggy through the Adirondacks. He winds up by saying "All's well!" Okay, Oscar. All's swell at the Hi-Hat. Don't feed that horse too much oats. Happy landings!

Tonight, my fine pretty girls, remember that you can enjoy Glen Echo's Spanish ballroom and Dave McWilliams' perfecto dance music for no charge whatever. That means that the boy friend should have that much more to spend on ice cream sodas.

Recommendations: (without reservations.)

Johnny Slaughter's (Metronome room) arrangement of the everlovely "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes." He uses violin, muted trumpet, plucked violin strings and Roy Kiser's voice.

Night spot impresario Vincent Gallegher is planning the cutest tricks in service for his new Hour Glass (due to open this coming Thursday). One is that no plain bread will be served. Muffins, biscuits and corn bread will be served "A-Tisket, A-Tasket" style—meaning fresh from the oven every five minutes by a pretty lass with a brown-and-yellow basket. As for beverages—they'll be on Mr. Gallegher's King Cole Room standard—quite topping, if you ask us.

Maybe we're jumping the bell, but we saw a drove of handsome little porkers running around the barnyard at Griffith Farms Tavern. We're told that in late September they'll look mighty toothsome in the Tavern dining room—with apples in their mouths.

Brinkley's "Tropical Cooler" is the snappiest version of the Cuba Libre we've encountered (or want to). It's sizzled up with Worcestershire sauce and a couple of other trick ingredients. Proprietor Jimmy Crandell got the recipe from an inspired customer and, after a sip, decided to put it on his drink list.

New Faces:

There'll be a new orchestra at Show Boat this evening. It's Howard Pothan's swing-y unit with Libby Frazier acting as singer and mistress of ceremonies. The Pothan lads are a versatile crew, can tap dance and vocalize, as well as make instrumental music.

Another new face, and a pretty one, is Faith Moore's down at Pine Grove. Faith sings with the orchestra and is considered an ace drawing card by Manager Dick Richards.

—The Old Naturalist.

Spike Sulks and Plans.

Spike, the young buck, had been one of the first to discover the Old Naturalist when the latter came to live in Farmer Brown's sugar house over among the big maples in the Green Forest. He had been taught when a very little fellow that the man smell was a cause for alarm. So the first time that the Merry Little Breezes brought it to him over there near the sugar house he at once was suspicious and took care to keep out of sight. At least he thought he was keeping out of sight.

The next day curiosity brought him back to find out if that man was still there. He was. After a few more visits, Spike understood that the man was living there. The man smell was all about the clearing, but somehow it no longer created distrust and fear. Spike, being smart, soon understood that there was no harm in this man, that he was a friend. Still, he was shy and very cautious until he saw a wise old doe, who was regarded by all the Deer folk as one of the wisest and smartest among them, boldly walk out into the clearing and browse there with the Old Naturalist sitting in plain sight on an old stump.

"If she is not afraid there is nothing for me to fear," thought Spike and, hesitating just a little that first time, he also walked out into that little clearing.

One afternoon he visited the clearing a little earlier than usual. The old doe was not there. There was a certain great stump around which the old doe spent most of her time when she was there. Whenever Spike had approached her there she had driven him away. At first he didn't care. If she didn't want to share her feeding ground that was all right with him; there were plenty of other good places to eat. Then he became curious as to why she always stayed around that old stump. Now was his opportunity to find out.

As he drew close to the old stump his sensitive nose picked up a strange and tantalizing odor. It seemed to come from that old stump. Cautiously he approached. On that stump was a substance strange to him, but when he licked it he immediately wanted to lick again. You boys and girls know how it is when you lick a stick of candy—you want to keep right on licking. It was just so with Spike. He licked and licked.

But it wasn't candy that he was licking. No, indeed. It was salt, rock salt. You know, sheep and cattle are very fond of salt and farmers often put it out in the pastures for them. Deer are just as fond of it and will go a long way to get a taste. The Old Naturalist knew this and had put that salt there that he might have better opportunities to watch and study the Deer.

Spike was so intent on what he was doing that for once he forgot to be on guard. There was a rush of feet and out of the brush burst the old doe. Her eyes blazed. The hair on her neck and along the top of her shoulders was raised. Straight at Spike she rushed, reared and struck at him with the sharp-edged hoofs of her front feet. Being young and quick, Spike dodged from under in the nick of time and dashed up an old road. The old doe followed him for only a short distance, returning almost at once to that salted stump. There she divided her time between licking it and feeding around in the neighborhood of that stump.

Meanwhile, the young buck watched from a safe distance and while he watched he sulked and tried to plan how he could get even with her.

"The mean old thing," said he to himself. "There is enough to spare for both of us. I have just as much right to that what-ever-it-is as she has. He licked his lips. Stopping every few steps he slowly made his way back down the road. The old doe looked up. She saw him and made a threatening movement. He stopped. She made a quick dash toward him. He whirled and took to his heels. Once more the performance was repeated. After this, Spike gave up and appeared to merely sulk. But while he sulked he tried to plan some way to get even.

The Timid Soul.

Bob Burns Says—

I believe California is one of the most sporting States in the Union. Their sense of fair play even extends to fishing. Of course if a man ain't a sportsman, he can go out here and fish with a well rope, but the fishin' club won't give him a medal or a certificate unless he catches a fish on a light line. They figger if you use a line of more than 27 pound pull, you ain't givin' the fish a fightin' chance.

Aunt Bercie was kinda disappointed when she didn't get a certificate for catchin' a 300-pound fish. I says "What kind of line did you use?" and she said "Ordinary wrappin' twine." I says "Well, that hasn't got a pull of over four pounds!" And she says "I know it—but they disqualified me because I caught the fish on a bent pin!"

Woman Identifies Two Seized Here As Theft Suspects

Two suspects arrested as members of a gang wanted for 50 robberies here and in nearby Virginia were identified yesterday by Mrs. Cora Horn as the men she saw Friday fleeing from her house at 4310 Georgia avenue northwest.

One of the men confessed to ten robberies and housebreakings in Washington. In possession of the two men police found corners torn from a number of banknotes, believed to be a collection reported missing a month ago by James Bonifant, of 1000 South Twenty-sixth street, Virginia Highlands. A former bank clerk, Bonifant saved the corners which have no value as a hobby.

Police plan today to bring together the two men, who are now held on open charges at different precinct stations, for further questioning in an attempt to link them with other robbery and housebreaking cases.

$130,000 Spent For Arlington Power Projects

Virginia Co. Is Renovating Jefferson Street Substation.

BUREAU OF THE POST.
Clarendon, Va., Tel. Oxford 0-509.

To meet increasing demand for electric service in Arlington County and adjacent territory, the Virginia Public Service Co. has started a $130,000 construction program, according to B. J. Dorsey, local manager.

The two major items of construction involved are Jefferson street substation and the Annandale transmission line which two alone will cost $85,608.

The Jefferson street substation is being renovated. Transformers double the present capacity will be installed. The cost for this is over $43,780.

The present transmission line running 8 miles to Annandale is being rebuilt for $41,828. The new line will not only increase capacity but will provide facilities for feeding current to Arlington from two directions. This will be of great value during temporary interruptions to service caused by storms.

Completion of construction at the substation and of the Annadale line is scheduled for early September, Dorsey said.

Construction has already been completed, Dorsey added, at the Barcroft substation, where transformers of greater capacity and automatic circuit reclosing breakers have been installed.

Within the next two months Barcroft and vicinity will have its overhead distribution system changed from 2,300 volts to 4,000 volts at a cost of $10,000. The Barcroft circuit-breaker cost $4,000.

Tomorrow night, the county welfare board will meet at the courthouse and it is expected a superintendent of public welfare will be named, to take office September 1.

Under the new setup in the State, Arlington County, classed A in accordance with its population of approximately 48,000, must have for superintendent someone with qualifications for Class "A."

Tonight, according to Chairman Hugh J. McGrath, the board meets at 8 o'clock to discuss its budget for the year.

Appointment of Paul W. Ferris, former sports editor of The Washington Post and member of the Falls Church town council, as professor of journalism at Arlington Institute, was announced last night by Mrs. Nena Helen Foster, principal.

Ferris, now assistant city editor ofk the Washington Star, has had more than ten years' experience in newspaper work in Washington, Richmond, New York, Chicago and other cities, covering both general news and sports assignments.

Other members of the faculty announced by Mrs. Foster include Edna Virginia King, shorthand and office machines; Louise Murray, English typewriting; Mary Goin, shorthand and typewriting; Linus F. G. Goyette, accounting; Harry W. Porter, business law, and Merle A. Foster, statistics and vocational guidance.

Arlington Institute, located in the Jones Building in Clarendon, will begin its fall and winter term with day and evening classes Monday, September 12.

The advisory board of the Institute is composed of Frank L. Ball, sr., George A. Collier, Ashton C. Jones, jr., Mrs. Elizabeth B. Magruder, Monroe H. Stockett and Carol F. Winchester.

Before a crowd of 500, the Lyon Park Boys Club yesterday won the Field Trophy at a field meet of Arlington boys' clubs including Cherrydale, Barcroft and Ashton Heights.

Quiet Primary Due Sept. 12 in Prince Georges

Only 3 Contests Slated for County Nominations, All Republican.

With midnight today the deadline for candidates to file, a quiet primary election was in store yesterday for Prince Georges County on September 12. So far only three contests for county nominations have developed, all in the Republican Party.

Republican leaders announced they would complete their slate today. The State central committee announced a number of its selections following a meeting last week.

The principal Republican primary contest to date is between Clifton Stello, Beltsville farmer, and Andrew Gasch, chief of Bladensburg Fire Department. Both men are seeking nomination for sheriff.

The other contests are between candidates for the Republican State central committee. There are nine candidates for the seven places on the committee.

The Democratic State central committee indorsed a slate of candidates early last week, and so far only those candidates indorsed have filed. Efforts of independent Democrats to oppose organization-backed candidates in recent years have proved futile. The closely-knit Democratic organization is headed by president of the State Senate, Lansdale G. Sasscer, a candidate for the gubernatorial nomination.

The University of Maryland, in co-operation with the Department of Agriculture, has developed a variety of potato which will resist late blight, Dr. Robert A. Jehle, plant pathologist of the University Extension Service, announced yesterday.

The new variety of potato was discovered, Dr. Jehle said, after more than 800 different varieties and seedlings had been grown in experimental plots in the western part of the State this summer. The blight-resisting potato will be ready for distribution soon.

Meanwhile, Dr. Jehle warned Maryland growers to spray their crop as a precaution against the disease, which last year caused heavy damages.

Announcement of the winner of a contest to choose the most popular boy and girl of the greater Washington area will feature the close of the St. James Church carnival at Munt Rainier (Md.) tomorrow night.

Civil Service Warned.

In the midst of Maryland's hot primary fight, the United States Civil Service Commission yesterday warned classified Federal workers against engaging in political campaigns.

The warning, in the form of a poster, was described by the commission as "routine," but it came shortly after John G. Forsyth, business agent of the Machinists' Union, had asked how far Federal employes could go in aiding the campaign of Representative Lewis, New Deal candidate against Senator Tydings.

The warning poster listed those forbidden activities, among them use of campaign stickers on automobiles and "assuming political leadership or becoming prominently identified" with any political movement.

Other Developments.

There were these additional developments:

A Post reporter, after a survey in Baltimore, found Lewis strong in the Maryland metropolis and likely to carry four of the six legislative districts.

In Baltimore, Senator Tydings described as "lies" charges by Lewis that he had been "lobbying for big business rather than for the people of Maryland."

Last night, in a speech at Mayo, Anne Arundel County, Lewis said Tydings, as a result of his Sunday evening radio broadcast, had "made the issue in this campaign clear to every Maryland voter."

"He is against President Roosevelt and all he stands for—unequivocally, unalterably opposed," said Lewis.

Charges Loans Accepted.

Lewis wanted to know why, since Tydings had opposed so much of the New Deal, he had taken "personal advantage" of almost every one of its benefits. He said that Tydings borrowed $12,000 from the Home Owners Loan Corporation for his mansion at Havre de Grace, later paying it back.

He said Tydings got a free WPA road to his place at Oakington, a $15,000 WPA yacht basin near his home in Havre de Grace, and a Federal loan to purchase steers for his farm.

Lewis' charge that Tydings "lobbied for big business" was uttered in his radio reply to Tydings Sunday night. He said Tydings had

Grain Surplus Lowers Prices To Rival 1933

Administration Faced With Same Situation as Gave Birth to AAA.

Despite five years of planning to raise farm prices and income, the Administration was faced yesterday with an agricultural situation challenging that which gave birth to the AAA.

Crop surpluses, the thing AAA set out to conquer, shared blame with the business recession and slow world demand, for a deep drop in farm income and prices.

Inclusive Government benefits, farm cash income in the first six months of this year was estimated at only $3,341,000,000 by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, a cut of 12.7 per cent under the same period last year.

Bureau estimates of farm income for the full year were $7,500,000,000, or $1,100,000,000 less than in 1937.

Wheat and cotton, the one making a near-record 956,000,000-bushel crop and the other running up a 13,400,000-bale surplus, were selling below 1933 figures. The index price of all grain crops was 77, as against 78 in October, 1933.

Cotton, selling at around 8.25 cents a pound (against 9.16 cents a pound

Officials Reword Parking Ban So It Is 'Fool-Proof'

District officials yesterday brought forth a "fool-proof" regulation on parking near intersections, which is to be approved today.

By inserting the words "existing line of building" in place of "building line" in the regulation, Washington motorists can have no complaints, Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen said.

The present regulation prohibits parking "between the intersection of curb lines and a point 20 feet back of the building line, but in no case to exceed 50 feet from intersection of curb lines except as otherwise expressly provided in these regulations."

Enforcement will not begin until 10 days after publishing of the amended regulation, and until, Hazen pointed out, the top of the curb lining the restricted area has been painted solid yellow, replacing the present three yellow stripes.

Green Reveals Defection of 2 Locals From Lewis' Own Unit.

By the Associated Press.

Atlantic City, Aug. 20.—President William Green of the A. F. of L. disclosed tonight the federation was intensifying its three-year-old fight with the C. I. O. by pressing organization drives into coal mining and the maritime industry.

Green said the federation's efforts to build up strength in coal mining, now dominated by John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers, resulted in the switch of two U. M. W. locals to the A. F. of L. last week.

The executive council postponed discussion of grievances against the National Labor Relations Board, and framing of recommendations for amendments to the Wagner labor relations act which would either restrict or more clearly define the board's powers.

First step in the federation's maritime organization campaign calls for merger of the Sailors Union of the Pacific and A. F. of L. seamen's unions at Atlantic, Gulf and Great Lake ports.

The sailors' union, which has been independent, recently voted to affiliate with the A. F. of L.

The A. F. of L. leader said he had reports a "considerable bloc" in the C. I. O.'s National Maritime Union was ready to break away from the Lewis organization.

'Purge' Answers Reds' Dream, Writer Says at Dies Inquiry

By Sidney Olson.

President Roosevelt's purge of the Democratic Party is in exact accord with the aims of the Communists, who envision a new liberal party created out of the present split, J. B. Matthews, writer-teacher, charged yesterday before the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Matthews concluded days of sensational disclosures, in which he named scores of leading citizens as "fronts" for the Communist Party, by charging the Red influence had now pervaded Hollywood, the Nation's churches, the United States Army and the political parties.

Shirley Temple, said Matthews, along with many other Hollywood stars, 60 members of Congress, preachers and educators, were

Dewey Rows With Pecora, Gets Rebuke

Policy Banker Testifies of 'Fix' to Eliminate 'Bad Numbers.'

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Aug. 22.—District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey, prosecuting James J. Hines, veteran Tammany leader, in Supreme Court today, on charges of conspiring to protect Dutch Schultz's policy racket, accused Justice Pecora, who is hearing the case, of favoring counsel for the defense. Justice Pecora resentfully rebuked the district attorney and declared he would continue to rule as he deemed fit to keep improper evidence from the jury.

Their colloquy, conducted during argument by opposing counsel at the bench, was unheard either by the jury, which was out of the room, or by courtroom listeners including reporters.

It became known only because newspapers of the city had combined to have transcripts of the court record wired into their offices. After a vain attempt to prevent the publication of the record, Justice Pecora ordered that conversation between counsel and the court be deleted from the transcript.

Was High Point of Hearing.

In consequence, records of all later conversations at the bench today were withheld from newspapers; these, and presumably similiar records during the remainder of the trial are to be made public only after permission by the court.

The flare-up between the district attorney and Justice Pecora was the high point of today's hearing. The name of the defendant was brought into testimony only once, when Leo Altman, giant West Indian, testified Leo Rosenthal, lieutenant of Hines now held as a witness in $20,000 bail, and "Red" Williams, the Hines district captain who recanted testimony against the leader last week, were frequenters of the Schultz gang's hang-out in 1933.

Altman's job with the gang, he testified, included picking up $1,000 or more every Monday from "Big Harry" Schoenhaus, and taking it down to the court of special sessions for use in paying the fines of runners or controllers of the syndicate who might be convicted.

Alexander Pompez, Harlem policy banker, told of contributing $600 weekly in combination with another $600 by "Big Joe" Ison for the service of eliminating "bad numbers" which might pop out of the totalizators at various race tracks, thereby forcing them to pay out heavily to players who had picked those digits.

Induced Her to Join.

The day also brought forward another Harlem policy banker, Marcial Florez, who told how the Schultz gang had taken over his business.

A former small independent policy banker, one Gussie Silverman, also told how two "gorillas" for the Schultz mob, "Abe" Landau, or "The Killer," and "Lulu" Rosenkrantz induced her to join the combination. She told also how when she joined, police visits which used to average once or twice a day dwindled to once or twice a month.

Max Steuer, noted lawyer for Tammany Hall, appeared this morning in the courthouse, and it was learned he had been subpenaed as a defense witness by former District Attorney William C. Dodge, one of the judicial officers who, according to the prosecution, was under the influence of Hines in the alleged

Jail Hunger Strikers Die By 'Violence'

Murder Hinted in Climax of Self-Enforced Protest Fast.

By the United Press

Philadelphia, Aug. 22.—Four convicts whose battered bodies were found in isolation cells of Philadelphia County Prison met death "by violence" in a riotous 5-day hunger strike, a coroner's physician reported late today.

Coroner Charles M. Hersch, describing the circumstances surrounding the deaths as "very suspicious," supplemented Dr. Martin Crane's report with the announcement that the bodies were "blue" and that of one of the victims was "black."

All "Long-Termers."

The men, Joseph Walters, Pittsburgh and Harry Osborne, Edward Hayes and James McQuade, all of Philadelphia and serving long terms for burglary and shooting, were found in two cells in the "isolation" ward where hunger strikers were placed. Two other convicts, Joseph Forte, 24, and Morris Spatz, 27, one in each of the cells where the dead men were found, were unharmed.

Superintendent William B. Mills refused to comment on the deaths other than to charge that the four men were "agitators" using the hunger strike as an "excuse to make trouble." In his first announcement regarding the deaths, Mills described it as "suicide."

Hersch said the bodies were "congealed" and "blue from the chest up." Hayes, he said, was "black."

Official Suggests "Fight."

Persons who saw the bodies after their transfer to the county morgue said they bore "cuts" and appeared "bruised."

Mills issued a statement later denying the men were "handled with physical violence by any of my guards or men."

Replying to published descriptions of the bodies as having the appearance of men scalded by live steam or immersed in boiling water, Mills said "we did not use any rubber hoses, live steam or tear gas to calm the men."

He said that "possibly" the men had been killed in fighting "between themselves"

Strike Started Wednesday.

The men were reported to have refused to touch food since the strike began Wednesday night in protest against the monotony of fried eggplant, hamburger and macaroni.

Most of the 650 men who struck abandoned the strike after the first two days of water as a diet. The remainder succumbed gradually to the lure of bread and water placed before their cells and the aroma of roast beef and corn on the cob from the prison dining hall. All but the six in special confinement, where the deaths occurred, had announced their willingness to end the strike.

Earle Promises Probe.

Last night the prison was a bedlam. Nearly all of the 1,481 prisoners rattled tin cups on their cell doors. The noise was audible beyond the high prison walls.

Ancon, Canal Zone, Aug. 22 (U.P.). Gov. Earle of Pennsylvania tonight promised a "complete investigation" into the deaths of four hunger-striking convicts in the Philadelphia County prison.

The Governor is here with Mrs. Earle on an air tour.

Mexican Envoy Given U.S. Reply On Land Seizure

The State Department last night handed to the Mexican Ambassador the awaited United States reply to Mexico's rejection of arbitration as a means of settling a dispute running back as long as 20 years over nonpayment for properties of American citizens expropriated by the Mexican government.

In order to give the ambassador time to transmit this latest U. S. note to his government, simultaneous publication here and in Mexico City Friday was arranged.

The United States had pointed out in a note to Mexico that despite promises of settlement, many U. S. citizens had awaited periods ranging up to two decades for payment on expropriated property and suggested arbitration by an international group.

Middleburg 'Deb' Arrested Here on Speeding Charge

Miss Bettina Belmont, 19, prominent debutante horse woman of Middleburg, Va., was arrested last night for speeding along N street northwest. Motorcycle Policeman A. L. Dodge, who caught up with the socialite at 3400 block of N street, charged she was driving her auto at 50 miles per hour.

Miss Belmont was released on $100 collateral. Her check was cashed by the Mayflower Hotel. This was her second speeding offense, according to police.

She is the daughter of Mrs. Arthur White, of Clinton Farms, Middleburg, and the late Raymond Belmont. She received part of her education at Georgetown Visitation Convent here.

2 Earth Tremors Hit South Jersey And Philadelphia

Trenton, N. J. (Tuesday), Aug. 23 (U.P.).—Two slight surface earthquakes within an hour and a half were felt in the southern half of New Jersey and around Philadelphia late last night and early today.

Houses were shaken and many persons were awakened by the vibrations. A few persons reported being shaken from their beds.

The first shock was felt at 11.34 last night in an area approximately 50 to 85 miles, from the East Atlantic shore of New Jersey to Philadelphia —and 85 miles long from Trenton to the southern part of the State. Its duration was from five to 25 seconds. The second shock was more severe.

Director James Stokely, of Franklin Institute in Philadelphia, said the earthquake was "slight" and that the apparent center was in Bucks County, Pa., adjoining Philadelphia.

U. S. Junior C. of C. President Lends Support to Safety Drive

Whole-hearted indorsement to the Washington Post-Junior Board of Commerce accident prevention program was voiced last night by Philip C. Ebeling, national president of the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce, as 500 local members of the organization pledged support to stem the tide of accident injuries and deaths on the District's streets.

Speaking over the local outlet of the Columbia Broadcasting System, Ebeling said other units of the junior board throughout the nation would institute similar campaigns.

"The Washington Post - Junior Board campaign, from what I have already seen, will not be merely a flash in the pan," he said.

"It is through similar measures that the United States Junior Cham-

Crisis in France.

By the United Press.

Paris, Aug. 22.—A threatened nation-wide general strike, exceeding labor walkouts which paralyzed French industry and commerce two years ago, confronted Premier Daladier tonight after two of his key cabinet ministers resigned.

Minister of Public Works Louis Frossard and Minister of Labor Paul Ramadier quit the government in opposition to the premier's demand for drastic relaxation of the 40-hour week in industry and his action in calling out Senegalese troops to unload ships at Marseilles where 7,000 stevedores are on strike.

Both Frossard and Ramadier are Union Socialists, more leftist than Daladier's own Radical Socialists, but not so far left as the Socialists and Communists of the weakening Popular Front.

New Ministers Named.

Socialists and Communists, threatening serious labor trouble, tonight accused Daladier of capitulating to employers on the issue of the 40-hour week—keystone of the Popular Front's labor reform program—although his government nominally is of the Popular Front.

Possibility of a government crisis was seen when the Union Socialist party announced late tonight that it will meet in Paris Wednesday to consider the political situation.

The self-described "national defense premier," faced with acute internal troubles at a time when fresh complications have arisen in the Spanish and Italo-French situations, immediately selected two other Union Socialists to replace Ramadier and Frossard.

Deputy Anatole de Monzie became minister of public works, and Deputy Charles Pomaret was named minister of labor to cope with the threatening crisis.

Cabinet Fall Unlikely Now.

The executive committee of the General Labor Confederation, representing 5,000,000 organized French workers, tonight issued a manifesto describing "the danger to the country and infraction of the social laws" and calling on the workers to remain vigilant "for any action that may be decided."

The manifesto proclaimed the organization's determination to "protect the 40-hour week" and denounced the use of troops at Marseilles.

Daladier's speed in patching up his cabinet and the fact that Parliament is on summer vacation, after giving the premier sweeping decree powers, seemed to reduce possibility of any immediate downfall of the government which has been in power since last April 10.

Daladier's government may be the last to be termed Popular Front

Woman Identifies Two Seized Here As Theft Suspects

Two suspects arrested as members of a gang wanted for 50 robberies here and in nearby Virginia were identified yesterday by Mrs. Cora Horn as the men she saw Friday fleeing from her house at 4310 Georgia avenue northwest.

One of the men confessed to ten robberies and housebreakings in Washington. In possession of the two men police found corners torn from a number of banknotes, believed to be a collection reported missing a month ago by James Bonifant, of 1000 South Twenty-sixth street, Virginia Highlands. A former bank clerk, Bonifant saved the corners which have no value as a hobby.

Police plan today to bring together the two men, who are now held on open charges at different precinct stations, for further questioning in an attempt to link them with other robbery and housebreaking cases.

$130,000 Spent For Arlington Power Projects

Virginia Co. Is Renovating Jefferson Street Substation.

BUREAU OF THE POST,
Clarendon, Va., Tel. Oxford 0-509.

To meet increasing demand for electric service in Arlington County and adjacent territory, the Virginia Public Service Co. has started a $130,000 construction program, according to B. J. Dorsey, local manager.

The two major items of construction involved are Jefferson street substation and the Annandale transmission line which two alone will cost $85,608.

The Jefferson street substation is being renovated. Transformers double the present capacity will be installed. The cost for this is over $43,780.

The present transmission line running 8 miles to Annandale is being rebuilt for $41,828. The new line will not only increase capacity but will provide facilities for feeding current to Arlington from two directions. This will be of great value during temporary interruptions to service caused by storms.

Completion of construction at the substation and of the Annadale line is scheduled for early September, Dorsey said.

Construction has already been completed, Dorsey added, at the Barcroft substation, where transformers of greater capacity and automatic circuit reclosing breakers have been installed.

Within the next two months Barcroft and vicinity will have its overhead distribution system changed from 2,300 volts to 4,000 volts at a cost of $10,000. The Barcroft circuit-breaker cost $4,000.

Improvements have been completed at the Clarendon and Falls Church substations.

Tomorrow night, the county welfare board will meet at the courthouse and it is expected a superintendent of public welfare will be named, to take office September 1.

Under the new setup in the State, Arlington County, classed A in accordance with its population of approximately 48,000, must have for superintendent someone with qualifications for Class "A."

Tonight, according to Chairman Hugh J. McGrath, the board meets at 8 o'clock to discuss its budget for the year.

Appointment of Paul W. Ferris, former sports editor of The Washington Post and member of the Falls Church town council, as professor of journalism at Arlington Institute, was announced last night by Mrs. Nena Helen Foster, principal.

Ferris, now assistant city editor ofk the Washington Star, has had more than ten years' experience in newspaper work in Washington, Richmond, New York, Chicago and other cities, covering both general news and sports assignments.

Other members of the faculty announced by Mrs. Foster include Edna Virginia King, shorthand and office machines; Louise Murray, English typewriting; Mary Goin, shorthand and typewriting; Linus F. G. Goyette, accounting; Harry W. Porter, business law, and Merle A. Foster, statistics and vocational guidance.

Arlington Institute, located in the Jones Building in Clarendon, will begin its fall and winter term with day and evening classes Monday, September 12.

The advisory board of the Institute is composed of Frank L. Ball, sr., George A. Collier, Ashton C. Jones, jr., Mrs. Elizabeth B. Magruder, Monroe H. Stockett and Carol F. Winchester.

Quiet Primary Due Sept. 12 in Prince Georges

Only 3 Contests Slated for County Nominations, All Republican.

With midnight today the deadline for candidates to file, a quiet primary election was in store yesterday for Prince Georges County on September 12. So far only three contests for county nominations have developed, all in the Republican Party.

Republican leaders announced they would complete their slate today. The State central committee announced a number of its selections following a meeting last week.

The principal Republican primary contest to date is between Clifton Stello, Beltsville farmer, and Andrew Gasch, chief of Bladensburg Fire Department. Both men are seeking nomination for sheriff.

The other contests are between candidates for the Republican State central committee. There are nine candidates for the seven places on the committee.

The Democratic State central committee indorsed a slate of candidates early last week, and so far only those candidates indorsed have filed. Efforts of independent Democrats to oppose organization-backed candidates in recent years have proved futile. The closely-knit Democratic organization is headed by president of the State Senate, Lansdale G. Sasscer, a candidate for the gubernatorial nomination.

The University of Maryland, in co-operation with the Department of Agriculture, has developed a variety of potato which will resist late blight, Dr. Robert A. Jehle, plant pathologist of the University Extension Service, announced yesterday.

The new variety of potato was discovered, Dr. Jehle said, after more than 800 different varieties and seedlings had been grown in experimental plots in the western part of the State this summer. The blight-resisting potato will be ready for distribution soon.

Meanwhile, Dr. Jehle warned Maryland growers to spray their crop as a precaution against the disease, which last year caused heavy damages.

Announcement of the winner of a contest to choose the most popular boy and girl of the greater Washington area will feature the close of the St. James Church carnival at Munt Rainier (Md.) tomorrow night.
